Schuch will perform "WhaleTrilogy," a solo violin piece he wrote, as well as read from his book, "A Symphony of Whales." Following the performance, Mr. Schuch will be available for book signings. Tickets are $12 for adults, children under 12 are free with adult. For more information call 800.818.0608 or visit www.capecodchambermusic.org

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
HEARTS AND HEARING
Take care of your heart and you may also preserve your hearing in your later years. That is the conclusion of researchers who recently found a connection between cardiovascular disease and reduced functioning of the inner ear in older adults. In the study, the researchers tasted the functioning of the cochlea (the spiral-shaped organ in the inner ear that contains the hair cells crucial for hearing) in men and women between the ages of 52 and 97. Overall, those with a history of cardiovascular disease were 54% more likely to have impaired cochlear function than those who were heart-healthy. Those with heart attack histories were 80% more likely to have problems with cochlear function than those who did not.
Your ability to hear is as unique as your fingerprints. Medical conditions, childhood and adult illnesses, inherited deafness, age, and noisy environments all combine to produce different types of hearing impairment in different people. We invite you to turn to the services of a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER when you need help with your hearing. At 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, we'll find the hearing instrument best suited to your hearing abilities. PH: 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.
P.S. The study above raises the possibility that compromised circulation may adversely impact the inner ear.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6

Gear up for a challenging, fast-paced day. The Scorpio moon aligns with Jupiter at 1:22 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 9:11 a.m. the moon enters fiery Sagittarius, and the Mercury-Mars polarity culminates at 9:13 a.m. However, the Sagittarius moon will interact with Mercury and Mars, extending its influence throughout the day and evening. Take it slow and easy. Sidestep arguments, conflicts with others. Don't take chances or do anything risky. If you are working, it is better to handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands focus and concentration.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 7

A polarity of Venus and Neptune takes center stage. Its influence enhances creativity and artistic sensitivity. On the other hand, it is not favorable for making important decisions, purchases or long-term commitments. Keep it light and avoid touchy subjects between 12:353:35 p.m., when the moon and Pluto conjoin. The remainder of the afternoon and evening rates high for enjoying favorite pastimes and friends.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 8

It may be difficult to get motivated to work this morning. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Jupiter at 5:01 a.m. and becomes inactive. Influences turn around completely at 12:02 p.m., when the moon enters ambitious Capricorn. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished. Zero in on jobs that you have been putting off. You can get them out of the way now. A lunar opposition to Saturn sets the stage for a quiet evening. Repay debts, follow through on promises you have made to others.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9

You can start new activities before 10:57 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive until tomorrow afternoon. After that plan to finish projects already begun, tie up loose ends. A sun-Pluto alignment and a full moon buildup intensify emotions and generate high energy this weekend. This combination may bring to the surface hidden feelings, resentments. It offers an opportunity to free yourself from negative, unhealthy situations. Open your mind to new possibilities.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 10

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The sun and Pluto align at 4:39 a.m. The Capricorn moon continues inactive travel until 3:23 p.m. Spend time alone. Important insights will come, if you take the time to listen. The final windup to a full moon begins at 3:23 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. This is an evening that can go either way. Maintain a positive, easygoing attitude. Don't take risks.

MONDAY, AUGUST 11

Gear up for a hectic day. The full moon continues to build until tomorrow morning. In addition, Venus and Mercury prepare to align with Pluto, and Mars to Saturn. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Avoid signing contracts or launching important enterprises. Instead, plan to finish projects already begun, review and redo. Take extra quiet time out for yourself; meditate for inner peace and vision.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 12

The backside of a full moon is in force and effect, making for a hectic day. Stop, look and listen. Don't act on impulse. At 12:48 a.m. the full moon culminates, 19-degrees Aquarius. Venus aligns with Pluto at 1:17 a.m. The moon continues active travel in Aquarius until 2:35 p.m., when it opposes Jupiter. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging, tie up loose ends. The moon enters Pisces at 8:19 p.m. Mars aligns with Saturn at 10:56 p.m., and Mercury with Pluto at 11:00 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13

You can get a lot accomplished this morning, if you make up a list of things to do and stick to it. It is okay to initiate new activities until 12:19 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. Projects that require your imagination and creativity are highlighted.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 14

The Pisces moon forms challenging contacts to Pluto at 4:01 a.m. and Mercury at 6:29 a.m., when it becomes inactive. After that no major planetary activity occurs, and the inactive moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac. That means that this day is prime for vacationing, relaxing, veging out, recharging your batteries.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 15

Planetary action turns around completely at 4:00 a.m., when the moon enters energetic Aries. Follow through on commitments you have made or jobs that are tedious and labor intensive. You can get them out of the way today. Sports and physical activities get the green light. A lunar alignment to Saturn may generate delays, reversals this evening. Keep it light and go with the flow.

Neighbors express their concerns to Planning Board

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Water runoff and increased traffic were at the top of the list of issues concerning abutters to the 105-unit, upscale "Cedarmere" condominium project for the 55-and-older set proposed off Beechwood Street on the east side of Rte. 3A.

About 30 concerned citizens packed an upstairs meeting room at Town Hall last week for the Planning Board hearing on what could end up being the first development approved under the town's new Senior Overlay District, adopted at Town Meeting last fall. Due to the size of the crowd, the meeting had to be moved into a larger room in the basement. (The Cedarmere group came before the Planning Board again last night (Wednesday) after the Mariner went to press).

Last week's hearing was preliminary so the Planning Board could only give a sense of how it felt about the project and did not make any final decisions. During preliminary hearings, abutters do not need to be notified, but were included out of courtesy by the town so that residents are involved in every step of the process.

"What you see tonight is not necessarily what you're going to get, what you see tonight is what's being proposed," said Planning Board Vice Chairman Bill Good, who conducted the meeting in Chairman Al Moore's absence.

"All issues you bring to the table are important to us," he told the abutters, who were quick to provide myriad concerns following the 45 minute presentation by the developers, King Taylor Cohasset LLC.

King Taylor, whose principals are Kelli and David Calhoun of Sheldon Road and Tom Ragno of Lexington, said they came to listen and would take any concerns under consideration.

Cohasset isn't so taxing, study says

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Despite its penchant for passing Prop. 2-1/2overrides and average property tax bill of nearly $7,000 a year — Cohasset did not make the list of seven top, high-tax towns in a new study by the Beacon Hill Institute at Suffolk University.

That's because while Cohasseters, in general, don't seem to mind paying high taxes close to home, they're not wild about state taxes.

The institute looked at the voting records of all Massachusetts' 351 cities and towns on seven major state tax referenda since 1980 and looked at the number of Prop. 2-1/2 overrides since 1983.

While Cohasset has passed some 27 overrides — including general overrides for the operating budget and debt exclusions for large capital projects since Prop. 2-1/2 became law — it has a mixed record on state efforts to either limit or increase taxes.

Along with most voters in other towns, Cohasset voted overwhelmingly to pass Prop. 2-1/2 back in 1980. Prop. 2-1/2 limits the amount a community

Traffic island is a blacktop oasis

Volunteer keeps it looking beautiful

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

At the end of a long, winding lavender stoned driveway is a gardener's dream. Patches of black eyed susans and old fashioned day lilies complement the overflowing trumpet vines on the workshop roof, as a black cat in the green grass keeps close watch.

For Maryanne Cushing and her husband Dana, working the land at their Beechwood Street home is a passion which began almost 11 years ago, "and we haven't stopped working it."

she said. "When you drive in, you get a sense that nature's really happy here."

With many bountiful flowering gardens on the property, it's easy to see how much work and care has been put into their home's surrounding landscape. But the work doesn't stop there. Just up the road, passersby can enjoy Cushing's work as she has taken it upon herself to share the beauty of her flowers by "adopting" the island at the intersection of Beechwood and King streets.

With violets, yarrow, Siberian and bearded irises, spilling over the sides, mixing with coreopsis and evening primrose — Cushing has created a beautiful oasis in the middle of a plain streetscape. Most of the flowers she plants on the island are annuals and will only last one season, and a good number of the plants have been transported from her own yard.

"It's a challenge to know what plants to keep in there," she said, noting that it's important to plan the garden ahead, so something is always in bloom.

Cushing said the island project was started a few years ago by one of her neighbors, Amy Roebuck, because the town had plans to pave over the area Rather than lose the island, Roebuck decided to cover it with flowers and make it a beautiful neighborhood centerpiece. When Roebuck moved out of Cohasset, the island was "up for grabs," which is when Cushing took over.

"I love gardening and I love plants. I love the calmness," she said.

One of the challenges of taking care of an island garden is keeping it watered. Cushing said there has been a good amount of rain this season, so the plants have held up well, but problems can arise when there's a drought. She said one of her neighbors, who lives across from the island, has let her borrow the hose to give the plants a drink on a hot summer day. But generally, Cushing tries to incorporate hardy, drought-resistant plants into the garden.

This week in COHASSET

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall this week:

Harbor Committee, Sept. 16, 7 p.m.

School Committee, Aug. 21, 7 p.m.

Sewer Commission, Aug. 18, 6 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Aug. 18 (40A) & Aug. 25 (40B-Avalon), 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless indicated otherwise.

Hedlund backs seawall request

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, is going to bat for the town in its request for financial help to restore the section of seawall and sidewalk along Border Street from Atlantica to the Mill River Marine Railway. The project is estimated to cost about $600,000.

In a letter to state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Ellen Roy Herzfelder, Hedlund described the heavily traveled area as being in "dangerous condition."

"The importance of this project cannot be understated," he said.

Hedlund requested the Division of State Parks and Recreation (formerly the Department of Environmental Management) provide 50 percent in matching funds for the seawall reconstruction project.

"This would be consistent with the funding for other seawall projects in my district over the years," said Hedlund, whose district includes Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Weymouth, Norwell, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

Vo-Tech requests quarterly payment

Cohasset's assessment for the South Shore Regional Vocational High School in Hanover is $89,393 or $12,770 per student. The town sent seven students to Vo-Tech last year, and the current assessment is based on the number of students enrolled as of Oct. 1 last year.

"It lags a year," explained Robert J. Kelley, Jr., treasurer of the South Shore Regional School District. There are eight towns in the district, including Cohasset.

The school bills its towns quarterly, so Cohasset's current payment is $22,348.25.

Kelley explained Vo-Tech is more expensive than a regular high school because it provides various shops, such as auto shop, in addition to books, paper and other supplies. The school is also run "like a town," he said, in that it provides its own snow plowing, and retirement contributions and health insurance premiums for its staff. The school is also paying off a bond issue for an addition built 10 years ago.

Cohasset, along with Norwell, are assessed more per student than other towns in the district because they are considered more affluent by state standards, he said. The assessments are computed in accordance with a state formula established under the Education Reform Act.

Cleaning service for the Town Hall

The town has contracted with Rockland-based Contract Cleaning Collaborative, Inc. to provide janitorial services for Town Hall, the police-fire station and the public lavatories at Mariners Park (in the former Hagerty building).

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the company provided the lowest price, $22,000 annually for the town buildings. The company is already providing janitorial services for the library for $13,000 a year, he said.

One Source of Somerville, whose bid was less expensive than Contract Cleaning for the schools, was recently awarded the contract to clean the schools

Selectmen support Leicester's efforts

Selectmen voted to write a letter of support to the Town of Leicester for its efforts to force the state to present a unified balanced budget that is ratified by the House, Senate and governor by April 1. If not, the House budget would take effect and any state recall of money would be prohibited.

In the letter, Leicester selectmen stated the state budget practices are "irresponsible and unfair.

"The law demands the cities and towns pass balanced budgets no later than June 30 annually, yet we are forced to project revenues that are consistently different in each branch and are changed without noticed. This makes our task to be law-abiding impossible."

Under-ground meeting

A subcommittee of the Board of Selectmen consisting of Fred Koed and Merle Brown, along with Town Manager Mark Haddad, will meet with affected village businesses and the Waterfield Group to discuss any surface infrastructure such as covers that are needed for underground utilities. Preliminary design for burying the utilities is moving ahead, although progress on other village design improvements is on hold pending a decision on whether the Greenbush line will move forward. Haddad said some easements on private property would be required for the wires' project. Selectman Michael Sullivan stressed that those affected should be presented with plans that describe exactly what any impacts would be.

"It would be terrible to go forward when someone expects this and gets that," he said.

The Waterfield Group is the town consultant hired to design the village streetscape improvements that are being paid for with a state grant and private donations. If plans for Greenbush line are halted permanently, the scope of the plans might have to be changed because the MBTA, which is building the train, was going to pay for improvements to the municipal parking lot as part of the town's mitigation package.

School board has opening

Pescatore resigns to take CHS post

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Jane Pescatore is still going to be a familiar face in Cohasset Schools but it won't be from across the School Committee desk. The 56-year-old Lantern Lane resident has resigned from the School Committee to accept the position as middle-high school secretary for Principal Michael Jones.

A homemaker, Pescatore, who ran unopposed for an open seat on the School Committee in April 2002, is a former president of the Cohasset PSO.

"It was a difficult decision," Pescatore said. "But I had to go back to work full-time."

She explained she found out about the job, which pays about $34,000 a year, when she saw the advertisement in the Globe. She called Supt. Edward Malvey, sent in her résumé, and was interviewed by Jones, who made the decision to hire her.

Pescatore, whose resignation was effective Aug. 1, said remaining on the School Committee would have been a conflict of interest.

"I will certainly miss it," she said. "It was a very personal decision."

Pescatore said the secretarial position presented an opportunity for her to bring her school background to the job. She had been active in the PSO for seven years before being elected to the School Committee.

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said while he is sorry to see Pescatore leave the School Committee, he is happy she will remain in the school system.

Jane Pescatore is stepping down from the School Committee.

"She's always been a great supporter of the schools during her work with the PSO and then stepping up to the School Committee," Flynn said. "She's a great person and will bring a lot to the position she's going into."

Selectmen and the remaining members of the School Committee will hold a joint meeting in which they will vote for a replacement to fill the seat until the town election next spring.

At that time, there will be three School Committee seats up for grabs. The election will include the year remaining on Pescatore's unexpired term, plus two three-year terms for the seats currently held by members Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin, who both may seek reelection.

It's not clear how many candidates would be interested in serving out the remainder of this election year. Adrienne MacCarthy, current PSO president, said she may put her hat into the ring. MacCarthy finished just two votes behind Martin in the April 2001 Town Election, in a three-way race for two seats. At the time, Martin and DeGiacomo were seeking reelection for their second terms.

"I haven't ruled it out, I asked (Town Manager) Mark Haddad about the process today," MacCarthy said Tuesday.

The last time a School Committee member stepped down before finishing his term was Joe McElroy, who resigned in April 1999. McElroy, who announced his intention to resign that January to give interested candidates time to take out nomination papers, had one year left on his term. Betsy Connolly of Lily Pond Lane was elected to fill McElroy's open seat.

Pescatore is married with three sons. She holds a bachelor's degree from Ohio State and had extensive business experience before raising a family.

Interested candidates for the Pescatore's School Committee seat should submit a letter of interest that includes their motivation for serving on the School Committee and background to either the selectmen or School Committee. The joint meeting, whose date has not been set at this time, will be advertised at least a week in advance, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Olde Salt House seating expansion sunk, for now

ZBA says parking plan is inadequate

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Olde Salt House at the harbor won't be increasing its seating capacity area anytime soon. The Zoning Board of Appeals has denied issuing parking variances for the popular, seasonal restaurant which would have allowed it to expand its occupancy from 52 to 99 patrons.

The ZBA decision is no doubt a welcome reprieve for the restaurant's residential neighbors, who have flooded a succession of hearings over the past three years to protest any increase in capacity because they said any expansion would exacerbate an already congested parking situation along Border Street. They are not surprised, however, that the Olde Salt House is appealing the ZBA denial to Superior Court.

"We'll see what happens next," said Dick Karoff, 19 Border St.

Sam Knox, 23 Border St., of the citizens' group "Friends of Cohasset Harbor," said in light of the appeal, the group is in the process of reviewing "the best avenue for preserving the quality of life at the harbor."

Attorney Charles Humphreys — who represents Peter Roy's company, Cohasset Cove LLC, owner of the Olde Salt House — filed the appeal Aug. 8. Roy also owns Atlantica, the Cohasset Harbor Inn (formerly Kimball's) and the Mill River Marine Railway, all at the harbor. [Roy bought the restaurant back in 1999; in May 2000 the ZBA limited occupancy at the Olde Salt House to 52 seats until a parking plan is approved; the restaurant initially sought seating for 124].

This past April, the Olde Salt House presented a scaled-back plan for 99 seats; the hearing was continued to May and then June. To comply with the bylaw that requires one space for every three seats, with a capacity of 99 — the Olde Salt House would need 33 parking spaces. The Olde Salt House, which has 13 parking spaces, needs variances to create at least 20 additional spaces because spaces were more than 500 feet away from the restaurant and they were undersized, ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick said.

The restaurant proposed to reconfigure the existing valet parking at 127 Elm St. and reconfigure a portion of the parking area at the Cohasset Harbor Inn. In a brief to the ZBA, Humphreys stated the proposed valet parking plan would provide an efficient way for customers to access the restaurant, which offers the only outside dining at the harbor.

But in its July 23, 2003 decision, the ZBA didn't buy the applicant's new plan to provide adequate off-street parking saying the "additional" spaces subtract from "already inadequate on-site parking" at the Cohasset Harbor Inn and use "undersized" valet spaces in the Elm Street lot.

The ZBA stated it will not reduce the restaurant's current capacity below 52 because it would "create uneconomic operating conditions." The ZBA also said it seemed implausible that the Elm Street lot could accommodate enough spaces unless the lot was made off limits for Atlantica parking, which was exacerbate Atlantica's parking shortfall.

"...without the creation of additional parking, expansion of the Olde Salt House would incontrovertibly add to congestion in the district," the ZBA decision states.

In its decision, the ZBA reduced the number of handicapped spaces required at the Olde Salt House from three to one.

Selectmen hope no Keno at DiNero's is a sure bet

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Selectmen are continuing to object to a Keno license at DiNero's restaurant on Hull Street near West Corner. In a letter to the Massachusetts State Lottery Commission, Town Manager Mark Haddad stated selectmen object to the license on the grounds it would not be in the public interest. Haddad said residential abutters are opposed as well as the Greek Church, which is within 500 feet of the establishment. Selectmen also have concerns about parking, which is already congested. Haddad said the current bar is overcrowded and only seats 11 patrons.

"The board believes that the addition of the Keno license at this establishment would not benefit either the town or the lottery commission," Haddad stated. "The area proposed for Keno and the anticipated revenues do not merit the issuance of this license." The board made its case at a hearing before the lottery commission on May 28 and followed up, as the commission requested, with the Aug. 6 letter.

Selectmen voted in June 2002 to object to DiNero's request for a Keno license. The request then went before the lottery commission, which has the authority to issue the license. At the time, Gregory Sullivan, the attorney for DiNero's, estimated the game would generate about $2,000 a week for the restaurant.

Keno is a game akin to Bingo. Players are given a sheet of numbers and asked to mark anywhere from one to 12 spots and can wager up to $20 on each sheet. The winning numbers are then displayed on a screen and prizes are given out based on the number of picks the player picked correctly. A new game is displayed on the Keno screen every five minutes.

There is currently one Keno screen in town located at the Cohasset Food Mart on 3A.

Health board worried about Cedarmere's water runoff

But likes the overall proposal

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The proposed 105-unit Cedarmere development is a hot topic all over town, and the Board of Health is no exception.

While giving the concept high marks, the Board of Health has concerns about possible storm-water runoff as well as what the development would mean to the current sewer situation in town.

If approved, Cedarmere would be an upscale condominium project for the 55-and-older set, on the 41-acre Hayes estate off Beechwood Street on the east side of Rte. 3A. It would be the first development of its kind to be built under the town's new Senior Overlay District.

"I like the whole concept of the plans for the Hayes Estate," said Chairman Steve Bobo.

"I like the whole concept of the plans for the Hayes Estate."
— Steve Bobo, Health Board chairman

However, he said he is concerned about storm water runoff. But at this stage of the process, the developers are not required to have plans outlining any water runoff or sewer systems, he said.

Bobo and Town Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the impact additional homes could have on drainage could be considerable. They hope the developers will come up with a plan the board can stand behind.

While examining a map of the area at Monday's health board meeting, Godzik and Bobo said they believe the most favorable route for directing storm water from the site would be into Bound Brook which ultimately leads to the Gulf River.

"I would favor a storm-water plan from Cedarmere to Bound Brook," Bobo said.

The board also mentioned the potential of the development seeking to connect to the town sewer and what that could mean for Little Harbor, which, member Peggy Chapman, thought had priority.

The Sewer Commission has Cedarmere on its Monday, Aug. 18 agenda. The Planning Board meet with the Cedarmere developers last night after the Mariner went to press. Look for coverage of both meetings in next week's Mariner.

Neighbors are not sold on plans for Hayes Estate

Abutters are worried about increased traffic along Beechwood Street generated by residents of the 41-acre development. Proposed are two entranceways – one off Beechwood Street (the section that runs nearly parallel to Norman Todd Road) and the other off Rte 3A (near Mendel Road).

Fire Capt. Mark Trask said the fire department is concerned about access. While the current driveway from the Beechwood entrance is nice and woodsy, "We need to be able to get into Sherwood Forest," he said.

The current access road off Beechwood Street does not provide adequate accessibility because it is only a one-way path, he said, adding it would have to be expanded to two lanes. "Our trucks aren't getting any smaller," Trask said. On-site maneuverability for fire trucks that need wide turnarounds is another concern, he said.

Some abutters, like Dave Johnson, 147 Beechwood St., said the project would exacerbate the current problem they have of pulling out of their driveways to get to work in the morning.

However, the developers say many of the residents would be retired and would not be leaving the complex during peak times. Their traffic study estimates only 56 vehicle trips during the morning peak hour; and expects 60 percent of vehicle trips will exit via Rte. 3A.

But Laurie Hegarty,143 Beechwood St., said the traffic study was done around the Fourth of July, when people were out of town, and may not reflect the actual traffic patterns that occur on a daily basis.

In a telephone interview after the meeting, Ragno said that from past experience, developments such as the one proposed for Cohasset have a small impact on traffic patterns. He also said that much of the evidence given by abutters was anecdotal, and the traffic consultant uses science to predict the outcome. In their opinion, the traffic will remain the same in the development's bordering areas, he said.

The Planning Board said Police Chief Robert Jackson surveyed the proposed Rte. 3A access-egress and recommended it serve as a right-turn only exit point, which abutters say would cause more exiting traffic at the Beechwood entrance. Member Peter Pratt said the traffic study also doesn't take into consideration what happens if Greenbush, Avalon, or any major change happens in the next 50 or so years.

Dave Martell, 29 Hammond Ave., said the volume of trucks coming in and out of the property during construction would also have an impact.

Water problems

Residents said many area houses experience basement flooding on a regular basis, as well as low water pressure and bad water quality.

John Kennedy,115 Beechwood St., said he has been living in his home for the last 33 years and that "there have been seasons when the water is just running down the driveway."

Dave Johnson,147 Beechwood St., also has a flooding basement and said that currently, he is not able to drink the water out of his faucet because the water quality is so bad, even though he lives in a brand new home with brand new pipes. His new dishwasher has been ruined from the water, and on top of that, he has very low water pressure.

"[Water quality] is really poor — and that's an understatement — and it really has interesting colors," said John Kenney, 53 Beechwood St.

Some have had to redo their septic systems at a huge cost because the ground conditions are so bad.

"I have a worry that my system could be damaged," said Catherine Baker, 33 Hammond Ave.. Because her land was surveyed with the current situation in mind, she worries her system might not be able to handle the extra runoff water that could come her way.

By taking the trees out for the development, Baker said, "It's going to take the root system that holds drainage and it's going to make matters worse."

But after the meeting, Ragno said a drainage system has not been drafted yet, and concerns about water runoff needn't be an issue. He said any proposed system needs to comply with set standards, and a system will not be approved that makes matters worse.

"We know those rules and we have to comply," he said.

Abutters are also worried about their quality of life post development.

Velma Begley, 455 Beechwood St., said with blasting and bulldozers, wildlife might leave and never come back. She also worries about whether the peace and quiet she and many neighbors originally bought their houses to enjoy, will still exist when the building is complete.

"We're not rich people and we'd like to stay there. We've had years invested in the area and we can't drop $1 million on a house," she said.

Begley also noted the project wants to hook up to town sewer, perhaps edging out existing homes. "I'd hate to see another area of town who'd like to hook up be delayed even further," she said.

Capt. Trask, who said the department is spread thin and response time to a second call is sometimes delayed, also urged that sprinklers be installed in each unit.

Members from the Cedarmere group have a good feeling about the outcome of the meeting. Kelli Calhoun said she wasn't surprised about concerns stated, as many had already been expressed at the on-site open house held Saturday Aug. 2.

"We want to make sure we hear each and every one," she said. "They have every right to be concerned."

The developers will be taking the concerns into consideration, but feel that overall, their project is something the town would benefit from.

"I didn't hear anything that would make me think our project isn't a great project for the town," Ragno said.

The Senior Overlay District, which was created to encourage housing for senior citizens, allows for higher density housing than is usually allowed in the residential district, if the development meets the requirements of the new bylaw established at Town Meeting last fall.

"It's absolutely what I envisioned when I was voting yea," said Good, the acting Planning Board Chairman.

Plans include 14 units in a new grand manor house near the center of the site that would also include an underground parking garage; 23 single-family residences, and 18 two-family residences in clusters around courtyards to preserve open space. A barn on site would also be renovated into a single-family residence. All market-rate units would be 2,400 square feet, have two bedrooms, and would start at $650,000.

Twenty-nine affordable, one- and two-bedroom units are planned for a building to be constructed near Rte. 3A with parking for 50 cars. A cabin at the western end of the site would be renovated into two additional affordable units. The 31 affordable units put the development over the minimum 26 (or 25 percent), required under the Senior Overlay District.

Water pipe upgrades are a sign of the times

Let residents know what is happening

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

New signs are popping up on the streets of Cohasset, and they have nothing to do with traffic. As part of a major overhaul to the town's water system, the Cohasset Water Department has gone the extra mile to ensure residents are aware of the water improvement projects under construction around town.

Water commissioner Glenn Pratt said since 1996 the water commission has been on the "fast track" to rebuild the water system, which includes the replacement of roughly 36 miles of pipe. However, in the 53 years the water department has been in service, this is the first time signs have been used to specify who is working on a project.

The signs, which were designed and made by David Hassan of Hassan Wood Carving and Sign Co., say "Continuing to improve your water system," and are rippled at the top like ocean waves. Names of the water commissioners are featured at the bottom.

Currently, construction is underway on South Main Street from Beechwood Street to the Scituate border, with old pipe being replaced with brand new 12-inch water mains. Projects are also under construction on Rte. 3A by the Scituate border, as well as the "hillside" area of town, which includes Bancroft Road and Oak Street. Roughly four or five streets "off the beaten path" have also been worked on, which Pratt said had pipes which were in dire need of being replaced.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said the signs were put up on the construction projects for two reasons. First, when driving by sites where the road is torn up, it's hard to tell whether the project involves sewer, water, or drainage systems. When residents see the Water Department signs, they know who is responsible. The signs also help raise awareness that the problems being faced by many residents regarding water quality are being addressed, one at a time.

"It's important that people know it is a water project to improve their systems," McNabb said.

Pratt also said it's a way for people to know that the money allocated for these projects is "going down into the ground," and progress is being made. Currently, the town is spending around $2 million a year on water quality improvements, he said.

Knowing who is responsible for the project also gives residents someone to contact if they have questions, concerns, or want to report an incident if something doesn't look right at a work site.

"If something goes wrong, we'd rather hear about it," Pratt said.

The ultimate goal of the town is to improve water quality for its residents and Pratt believes. "Every time you replace pipes, you get better water."

"When water leaves the treatment plant, it's crystal clear," he said, but went on to explain that some of Cohasset's pipes are more than 100 years old. Over all those years, pipes which once had a 10-inch diameter can shrink down to a three or four inch opening as buildup collects on the pipe's inner walls. As water travels along the miles of pipes, it picks up a variety of materials from the buildup, before coming into a house.

Because water quality is so important for everyone in town, projects need to be prioritized. Pratt said the most urgent cases involve fire safety, and pipes at hydrant sites are always first to be replaced.

"They have to be able to deliver enough to put out a fire," he said.

Hydrants are constantly being tested to make sure they have adequate water flow for fire-fighting purposes. After hydrants, the older pipes in town take priority, while other less urgent cases must wait.

At last week's Cedarmere hearing before the Planning Board, many residents from the Beechwood Street area said they were concerned the proposed 105-unit development would make their already taxing water situation even worse. Many residents complained of strange odors and colors in their tap water and some even said their water is ruining new bathroom fixtures and kitchen appliances.

New signs, like this one on Rte. 3A by the former South Shore Chevy Geo site, are alerting residents to water system improvements.

"I'm not surprised to hear that," Pratt said, noting that the town is well aware of the situation in that part of town. He said because the town does have a list of priorities, those homes are roughly on the "three-year out" list.

Projects in the works include Parker Avenue, for which construction will begin after Labor Day so as not to interfere with boating season. Next year, construction will begin for the entire length of South and North Main streets, which Pratt said is "a main feeder artery."

ZBA to tackle hot decision on 3 Jerusalem Lane Monday

Will deliberate during meeting

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Zoning Board of Appeals has a weighty agenda Monday with a handful of hearings and deliberations scheduled.

But none are as controversial as the impending ZBA decision on the Ayer house at 3 Jerusalem Lane.

ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick said the board would tackle the series of hearings first. Deliberations on 3 Jerusalem Lane would not start before 8 p.m., he said.

If the prior hearings on 3 Jerusalem Lane are a gauge then the ZBA can expect a crowd that includes lawyers representing Phil and Mary Anne Ayer and lawyers for some of the neighbors, who object to the house they say is out of step with the neighborhood.

What's at stake is a homeowner's right to build a new home with spectacular ocean views for which he was issued a building permit, over the objections of some neighbors, who say the house blocks their views and doesn't fit the neighborhood.

The zoning board's decision to uphold the neighbors' appeal of the building inspector's issuance of a building permit for 3 Jerusalem Lane has set the stage for recent hearings and the upcoming decision.

The zoning board agrees with the neighbors the building permit should not have been issued without the owner first obtaining a special permit because the lot the house sits on is undersized under the current zoning bylaw. The ZBA said because the lot is nonconforming, the Ayers should have applied for a special permit, unless they planned to stick with the exterior dimensions of the preexisting ranch-style home.

The zoning board must now decide whether to issue a special permit for the house. A decision to deny would mean the house is "substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood" [the standard in the bylaw]. The board must then determine how the house — which meets setback, height and lot-coverage requirements — increases the nonconformity and what aspect of that nonconformity is detrimental to the neighborhood.

Also at issue, is if the bylaw only protects vacant undersized lots that predate zoning. In other words, if the lot had been vacant when the Ayers bought the property, the neighbors would not have a case. But since there was an existing house that was razed, the neighborhood may have had the right to expect an existing home to remain essentially the same, or at least to have had the opportunity to be heard before the ZBA, the neighbors' lawyers argue.

Whatever happens the decision is likely to be precedent setting. Oversized homes on undersized lots are not uncommon in town. Lawyers for the Ayers found half a dozen building permits issued for new homes over the past few years on undersized lots that weren't required to seek special permits. However, the ZBA said the Ayers did not have standing to appeal those building permits.

Chittick said he hopes the ZBA will reach a consensus on Monday, so the decision can be written and voted on the following Monday before the Avalon hearing resumes on Aug. 25.

The Ayers were told last January to stop work on the home — nearly 80 percent complete at that point — after it was determined Building Inspector Bob Egan erred in issuing them a building permit. Neighbors had fought to stop construction on the property since August of last year, but Egan stuck to what he thought was a widely held, longstanding interpretation of the bylaw that replacing a smaller home with a larger one on a non-conforming lot was OK as long as the new home met all dimensional requirements.

can raise its property taxes from year to year. A majority of Cohasset voters also sought to repeal the state income tax surcharge in 1986 and roll back the personal income tax in 2000, both of which were successful statewide. They voted to abolish the personal income tax in 2002, which failed. They also voted against instituting a graduated income tax in 1994, which also failed.

However, Cohasset voters didn't agree with the effort to roll back the personal income tax rate back to 4.25 percent in 1990, which failed; and they supported raising the cigarette tax in 1992, which passed.

In the top seven "pro-tax" communities, a majority of voters opted for increased taxation on every major statewide voter referendum, the institute said. Those communities are Amherst, Conway, Leverett, Pelham, Shutesbury, Wendell and Williamstown — all of which are west of 495.

The seven towns that always voted for lower taxes and were less willing to raise them locally are Berkley, Billerica, Carver, Halifax, Plympton, West Bridgewater and Whitman, the institute said.

The Beacon Hill analysis is based on the premise that "like minded people like to congregate" and that people who don't mind paying high taxes for more goods and services such as schools, open space and local amenities will find towns to accommodate those needs. While those who don't like high taxes will move to communities that have lower taxes and fewer services.

"That some prefer high taxes while others prefer low taxes does not reflect negatively on either choice but shows how diverse communities accommodate people with diverse tastes," says David G. Tuerck, BHI executive director.

ART CLASSES

The South Shore Art Center is running a number of classes of special interest to teenagers. The Fall course lineup includes Portfolio 101: for High School Artists. This course is designed for high school students considering pursuing an art career or including a portfolio with their school admissions packets. Drawing, painting and printmaking techniques will be explored as well as photographing the art portfolio. The course allows high school artists the opportunity to enhance and supplement artwork to be used for admission to art school or college. Oil Painting for Teens will introduce the basics of oil painting while providing a supporting environment for self-expression and exploration of the oil paint medium. Challenging studio work will be a part of the series. Both classes will meet on weekends enabling busy high school students to participate.

An Introduction to Black and While Darkroom course will show students how to process their own film and how to make prints on variable contrast resin-coated paper. After ten weeks, students will have a foundation for further exploration of the darkroom. Students must have a 35 mm camera. This class will meet on Thursday afternoons. For information about these classes or other autumn offerings at the South Shore Art Center call 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

This sounds like a great way to work and develop those artistic talents in you.

ALS BENEFIT RACE

Despite a gray day, the recent sixth annual Jimmy Kennedy Memorial Race for ALS, a/k/a the Squirrel Run, in Quincy, was a tremendous success, raising more than $50,000 for the Angel Fund, a non-profit organization dedicated to funding ALS research at Massachusetts General Hospital. The race/walk is a tribute to Jimmy Kennedy, who lost his courageous battle with ALS, the disease better known as Lou Gehrig's Disease, in 1997 at the age of 31.

According to event organizer Rich Kennedy of Cohasset, the five-mile race attracted 480 runners of all ages and abilities, with course records set by both male and female runners. Taking top honors for the men was Kevin Gray of Walpole at 24 minutes, 46 seconds, followed by Chris Fitzgerald of Quincy and Brian Hamill of Watertown. Coming in at first for the women, with a course record of 29 minutes, 29 seconds, was Holly Madden of Scituate, followed by Tracey Timmons of Quincy, and Amy Wallace of Allston.

"The success of the event can be attributed to the many people who helped coordinate the activities, as well as the runners, walkers, friends and sponsors," Rich Kennedy added. "We also received tremendous support from Mayor William Phelan and his staff."

Kennedy extended special thanks to the following sponsors: New Balance, donors of shirts, water bottles, and prizes; Cohasset Cycle, donors of a bicycle for the raffle; South Shore Volvo for providing the pace car each year; Stop & Shop; Boston Athletic Club; Dominos Pizza of Quincy; and Tennessee Gas Pipeline – El Paso.

"This was a great event for a wonderful cause. All proceeds benefit the Angel Fund, an independent non-profit organization dedicated to finding a cure for this fatal disease," he said.

For information about the Angel Fund, call Fund Administrator Lisa Courtenay, at (781) 245-4545, or visit the website site at www.theangelfund.org.

Please make sure to send in all of your mid-summer activities and event information no later than Mondays at noon.

Helping new museum open a window to the world

Dupuis has lots of creative ideas

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The dust is starting to settle as construction of the Our World Global Children's Museum winds down and plans for permanent exhibits begin to take shape. But thanks to new Programming Coordinator Michele Dupuis, families won't need to wait for the museum's completion to take part in fun learning activities.

Under Dupuis' direction, the museum, which is housed in the 1929 wing of the old Osgood School, will begin utilizing its space the first week of October by offering "themed" birthday parties, playgroups, and movement classes. The museum is devoted to creating opportunities for children throughout the South Shore to gain global awareness through play spaces, rotating exhibits, and programming.

Having much experience working with children in a museum setting, Dupuis is confident these initial programs will be a success.

"I love working with children and I'm really excited about the concept of the programs," she said.

Birthday parties will provide hands-on activities, led by a museum instructor. Parties will be geared toward children from the ages of four to eight, but Dupuis said programs can also be developed with age-appropriate activities for older children.

Children can choose from predetermined party themes, which coordinate with the themes and missions of the museum, but Dupuis said she is open to any idea parents may want to implement.

The museum will also hold playgroups for toddlers. The first two themes will be French and Spanish introductions to early language for infants through four years. Age-appropriate activities will be centered around story time, free play, songs, and arts and crafts projects. An added bonus to this program is children with younger siblings can participate and mothers can work with the younger child in their group at the same time.

Movement classes featuring yoga, tai chi, step dancing and karate, will be held in two-week sessions to give children a taste of what each discipline is about. Dupuis said the classes will "Fit in with the theme of exploring the world." The common thread of fitness will show children how similar they are to children in other countries and celebrate the variations.

Dupuis said the programs provide children the opportunity to "learn how much we are the same. We share so much."

She also said the programs will allow children to experience different cultures in a very comfortable, safe environment. "I'm thrilled to be a part of it," she said.

"I love working with children and I'm really excited about the concept of the programs."

— Michele Dupuis, programming coordinator

Dupuis' interest in museum work began while she was still in college. While attending Westfield State College she held a full-time job in the Human Services office, as well as various part-time jobs.

"I certainly learned to juggle many things at once," she said..

One part-time job she held was at the Springfield Science Museum where led the live-animals program, during which she would introduce various critters to children including hissing cockroaches, lizards, and a nine foot boa constrictor. While studying to receive her degree in biology as well as minors in both education and chemistry, working with children at the museum was a perfect fit.

With the goal of one day becoming a teacher, Dupuis said she never would have guessed her career path would include museum work.

"I didn't expect to fall into it, then you fall in love with it and don't want to leave it," she said.

After graduating in 1997, Dupuis continued working for the Springfield Science Museum and one day saw a posting for a museum camping coordinator. Through this job, she coordinated over-night camping trips at the museum for Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts. The position had been part time, and Dupuis was just the person to help turn it into a full-time endeavor. Through the program, she developed a network of camp-in programs throughout Massachusetts.

"It's nice knowing what everyone else is doing," she said.

Another project she worked on in conjunction with the camp-ins, was a science program for girls. Most of the children she saw were urban youth, of which some were from low-income families. She set up programs with guest speakers, including a woman scientist, to come speak to the girls and open their eyes to the world of possibilities their lives could hold.

"The big thing was being able to see women that looked like them," she said, adding that for the girls to be able to meet a successful, African American scientist, really made an impression.

Once the museum is up and running, Dupuis' position will develop into a full-time role, which she can't wait for. A self-proclaimed workaholic, she said she really enjoys becoming immersed in her work and has a high level of dedication to the programs she runs.

After working with children in an urban setting, she is looking forward to working with the children in Cohasset who might not have as much experience with diversity. She believes the museum will provide the perfect outlet for parents to talk to their children about the subject of diversity, which can sometimes be hard to broach.

"I think it serves a need and an opportunity for families to come together in a good way," she said.

Dupuis also said she would "love to hear feedback about what people would like to see for future programs," opening the door for anyone in the community to become involved.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Keeping Cohasset beautiful

Volunteers add so much to our town. The efforts of these folks run the gamut from serving in elected or appointed office — to ensuring that a traffic island or other public space is lovely to look at.

In the weeks ahead, we'd like to highlight the efforts of the latter group. In a story by staff reporter Samantha Brown in this week's issue, we feature the efforts of Maryanne Cushing of Beechwood Street, who has taken over the care of the island at Beechwood and King streets from a former neighbor Amy Roebuck.

Thanks to Maryanne's efforts, motorists, joggers, cyclists and pedestrians alike can enjoy a small oasis of blooming color and fragrant scents in what otherwise might be just another intersection.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris suggested we write a series of stories about efforts like Maryanne's to help keep Cohasset synonymous with beauty, by focusing on people that take the time to keep it that way.

Last month Samantha Brown wrote about the efforts of the Village Renaissance Committee that has orchestrated all kinds of village improvements from refurbishing the James Brook Walkway to the beautifying pocket park next to Tedeschi's.

Selectmen recently asked for volunteers to serve on a town Beautification Commission like the town of Scituate has. (For a feast for your eyes, check out the traffic islands at the light in North Scituate and by Ronnie Shone's on Country Way and First Parish Road — which are the work of the commission). We think establishing a beautification commission can be a good idea but may not be necessary if enough citizens adopt public places near their homes or businesses by tidying up, pulling a few weeds, and planting some flowers.

It can be a lot of work and should be a labor of love. As Mrs. Cushing says, "It's one way I can serve the community."

If you know of a friend or neighbor, or of a local group, that is providing a beautification effort, please contact Samantha at 781-741-2935 or at sambrown@cnc.com

Sewer smoke testing to start

New England Pipe Cleaning Company Division, Heitkamp, Inc. will conduct a sewer system study for the Town of Cohasset to determine where storm water may be entering the sanitary sewer system.

Storm water, sometimes referred to as "inflow," can enter the system during periods of wet weather through many sources, including catch basins, damaged manholes, roof leaders, sump pumps, and basement drains. When present I excessive amounts, inflow increases the cost to operate the sewer system resulting in flooded basements and raw sewage overflows.

Smoke testing of the sanitary sewers will help to locate these sources of storm-water inflow to the system.

The smoke testing operations will be concentrated in the town center, Cohasset Cove and the harbor areas. The work involves blowing smoke into the sanitary sewer system to locate leaks and possible defective piping.

The smoke is non-toxic, non-staining and does not leave a residue. More than likely, the smoke will not enter a building unless the plumbing is defective. If the smoke does enter the building, do not be alarmed, open all windows to aid in the evacuation of the smoke and notify the field crew outside who will be in the general area. Caution must be used if smoke does enter a building, however, since all smoke can irritate breathing passages without respiratory protection.

Cooperation during this smoke-testing program will expedite the work effort. This work is scheduled to be performed Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 18 and 19 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., weather permitting.

The town manager, as well as the fire, police and the public works departments are aware of the work and will be available to assist if necessary.

All residents connected to the sanitary sewers will be notified with a hand-delivered notice at least 48 hours before the testing begins.

Concerns about cigarette smoke

TO THE EDITOR:

I am perplexed and concerned. Being a non-smoker whose system at times becomes nauseous around cigarette smoke, I am thankful for the rules in restaurants, bars, etc., prohibiting cigarette smoking. I can also empathize a bit with those folks who greatly enjoy smoking and have lost many privileges.

At this time, my deep-hearted concern on the smoking subject goes to the elderly housing in Cohasset. I have a friend who has chronic health challenges that are aggravated by cigarette smoke. She lives in the Town of Cohasset Elderly Housing complex. She is thankful for the provision to live in such a good facility at a price she can afford. The frustrating and dangerous part of her living situation is the fact that she has had to live among cigarette smoke for approximately four years. The last year, with a new housing complex neighbor, the atmosphere has been less-plagued by cigarette smoking; yet it is enough to make her health condition become intensified and making her most uncomfortable at times.

I believe and hope there could be a way the state could make a law that would provide for a section, separate from the rest, in elderly housing whereby smokers could live and enjoy the remainder of their lives smoking. At the same time, I believe separate facilities should be designated where non-smokers could enjoy the remainder of their lives free of cigarette smoke filtering into their units and the health problems and discomforts that issue from such an atmosphere.

Pesticide spraying

TO THE EDITOR:

Massachusetts Highway has announced it will spray herbicides to "manage" vegetation under guard rails in 113 cities and towns very soon.

The Town Manager from Marshfield, Angus Jennings wrote in the Boston Globe Aug. 10, 2003 that the Mass. Highway is reversing its five-year decision of zero tolerance of not using pesticides. He expresses his concern most persuasively.

Five years ago, I was fighting the use of herbicides on roadways by the state when the state responded to public concern and announced a temporary suspension of herbicide spraying. I was quoted in the Hingham Journal on March 18, 1999 and said that despite the victory, "as a concerned citizen, I'm going to stay on my toes." Oh, do my toes hurt—but I am glad I stayed on them for so many years.

In 1999, I took a ride to South Hingham and realized how close to the highway the houses on Gardner Street, Mallard Run and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints are. They are particularly susceptible to drift spray.

A major concern is Hingham's drinking water supply—Accord Pond. While I am writing this as a Hingham resident, I am concerned with all communities. Drift and water contamination knows no boundaries. All of the harmful substances we are exposed to are accumulative in our bodies. Very often, children are most susceptible.

If citizens' concerns were heard five years ago and stopped a dangerous practice, why can't we do it now? Please express your objections by calling Secretary Grabauskas at the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction at 617-973-7000; Gov. Romney at 617-725-4005; and local officials.

HEALTH NOTES

Getting back on your feet

Rehabilitation is a necessity

There are more than 200 web pages listed dealing with various forms of rehabilitation therapy in seven separate rehabilitation disciplines.

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Most of you probably have a routine which involves some form of exercise. It need not involve the sport jock's cardio-blast-tendon challenge, but it's something. And when you fail to do it for a day or two, you feel out of sorts, maybe down, guilty, wrong..... At least I do.

Well, that may be nature's way of sounding the alarm. One seems to lose the fine tuning very rapidly if it's not used. And, many times it's not our fault. Obligations frequently interfere with our best intentions. The fact is that if we slack off, even for a few days, we start to become physically less than we were a few days ago. Now, think about what happens when something really goes wrong. pulled tendon; fall; accident,....stroke?

Strokes prevent the brain from managing and directing the body to use muscles necessary for moving or talking or accomplishing other functions. They are very common, and according to the American Stroke Association, it's important to recognize a stroke.

- Sudden numbness or weakness of the face, arm or leg, especially on one side of the body
- Sudden confusion, trouble speaking or understanding
- Sudden trouble seeing in one or both eyes
- Sudden trouble walking, dizziness, loss of balance or coordination
- Sudden severe headache with no known cause.

If you experience symptoms, call 9-1-1 immediately.

In many cases, individuals experience Transient Ischemic Anomalies or TIA. Which are brief symptoms similar to those above, but which occur and then go away. However, it's important for people not to ignore temporary symptoms like those above. They should seek advice from a professional.

But if a stroke occurs, survival to enjoy a reasonable quality of life depends on rehabilitation. Even without a stroke or some major trauma, rehabilitation therapy may greatly shorten periods of pain and discomfort.

One of the larger health care industries in this country is rehabilitation. In the National Rehabilitation Information Center (NARIC) data base which collects and disseminates the results of federally funded research projects to anyone who is interested, there are more than 200 web pages listed dealing with various forms of rehabilitation therapy in seven separate rehabilitation disciplines. Literally billions are spent from fixing pulled muscles in athletic sports rehab therapy to major reconstructive therapy after trauma surgery and stroke.

Rehabilitation therapy is more than an available resource, it is a necessity. For those who have stopped running or playing sports, or are even just becoming less active, it's necessary for your health to substitute a minimum amount of some form of physical activity for any lost ability to exercise. Frequently this calls for rehabilitation therapy. Discussion of your activity routine with your physician or health care provider and see what they recommend.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

The wild sand roses of olde Cape Cod

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

I'm recently back from my annual pilgrimage to the tip of Cape Cod where the dwindling blooms of the wild sand roses tell me that we have turned the corner on another summer. I casually mention such to my Dad who reminds me that summer doesn't officially end until deep into September. Nonetheless, the rose, as well as hints in thin August air say something else. I remember it from childhood when, by mid-August, an indefinable melancholy tiptoed into Provincetown and settled quietly, a reminder that the bliss we had known for so many long and lazy weeks was coming to an end.

Our forebears, who lived close to the land, used nature's events as their clock and perhaps, like me, the blooming of the wild sand roses was one of their timepieces. Though I'm learning not to give up on summer come Labor Day, once the profusion of exuberant blooms is gone from the Rosa rugosa, my mindset changes. Each summer day thereafter, I know, is a gift.

Rosa rugosa is an alien species, native to Asia, which arrived on our shores by way of a shipwreck some century and a half ago. The rose's seed pods, called hips, are rich in vitamin C and were carried on ships to prevent scurvy. Cast onto the back beach of the Cape, the hips seeded themselves and began reaching their extensive root system throughout the Capes sandy soil.

At the time of the rugosa's arrival, the native salt spray rose, Rose virginiana, scrambled across the Cape landscape. The beachcomber Henry David Thoreau thought enough of the native rose to write eloquently of it in the journals that became his Cape Cod travelogue:

"When the roses were in bloom, these patches in the midst of sand displayed such a profusion of blossoms, mingled with the aroma of the bayberry, that no Italian or other artificial rose garden could equal them. They were perfectly Elysian, and realized my idea of an oasis in the desert."

I've often reflected on his words when I see the Rosa rugosa in bloom and I am certain that Thoreau would have enjoyed the rugosa - now more widespread than the native rose - as much as he did the Rose virginiana. Alien though the rugosa may be, there comes a time when even washashores have been amongst us long enough to be accorded some kind of native status — at least honorary. I can't imagine the Cape without the rugosa, its single, crepe-like carmine or white blossoms tossing against a backdrop of deep blue ocean and sky, and I for one would happily cast my vote to call it one of our own.

Today's rugosa's blossoms and fruits, progeny of those first washashores, have become, for me, a poetic symbol of the old Cape Codders themselves — unassuming idiosyncratic, informal of habit, self-made, stalwart - but also a symbol of permanence in a place that is rapidly changing and becoming like every where else. Every blush of it simple blooms and every draught of its pure perfume speaks to a bygone way of life. The ever-resourceful Cape Codder found a number of uses for the rugosa rose, boiling and mashing the hips into a tasty jam or tart filling, and steeping the hips to make a satisfying tea. The fragrant petals were used in a potpourri.

But, today, fewer and fewer Cape Codders are devoted to the rose the way their parents and grandparents were. And, even if they were, they would find the rose missing from too many places on the Cape, eradicated - like the blueberry, cranberry and beach plum — not by Mother Nature's blights but by commercial and residential development. So, too, have the ritual of harvesting wild fruits, and the making of things by hand, from scratch, lost their place in our modern society.

Some years ago I bought two Rosa rugosa plants, one white, the other pink, tucked comfortably into gallon containers. I planted them in my yard, hoping as so many people do when assembling their world, to recreate something I knew as a child. More than a decade later my roses scramble and thrive and perfume my yard with their unforgettable redolence, an unhybridized fragrance, the whiff of wildness, that has seeped so deep into my memory that every swallow sends me back to my own olde Cape Cod.

Like the roses on Cape Cod, my roses are a calendar and these past few days they tell me that summer is winding down. Spent petals litter the ground and from where they fell the once-green hips are swelling and reddening. A handful of blossoms keep the bees busy and a few last buds — a gift this time of the season — packed and twisted into delicate points, are ready to bloom with the next burst of nourishing sun.

There is, of course, much more still to bloom in the garden and my Dad is right, there is plenty of summer still to come. The Rose of Sharon, the hibiscus, the sunflowers, the vegetables and the grapes are all just coming into their own. Still, I'll miss the cheery blossoms of the rugosa when the last petals drop. I'll miss the perfume of a flower that cannot be improved upon by human hands, the smell of wildness that is too often lost in our tamed, manicured and hybridized world.

Diversity of candidates

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I tell you I'm moving to California, that's what.

It's the diversity of the candidates for governor that gets me.

Where else can I cast a vote for an Austrian-born muscleman, a Republican married to a Kennedy whose father was the chief of the Nazi military police in Belgium during World War II and whose best known reference in Bartlett's is "I'll be back?"

Or for a 4-foot-7 midget, a former child TV star, who tells one and all that "I'm probably the least qualified for the job," who promises to "drill for oil in every national park," and whose contribution to Bartlett's is the phrase "Whatchu talkin' 'bout?"

Or for a wheelchair-bound pornographer whose magazine is so raunchy that Playboy's Hugh Hefner won't allow it in the house where his bunnies and airbrushed centerfolds might see it?

Or for a Greek-born columnist who calls everyone "dahlink" and dumped her rich husband after he dumped $30 million on an unsuccessful run for senator and an environmentalist who claims to differ from Arnold by "the cars we drive — it's the hybrid vs. the Hummer?"

Or maybe my vote could go to a billboard model named Angelyne or to a bald-headed comedian who, for some reason, can make people laugh by smashing pumpkins and watermelons, or to any one of 500 potential candidates who have filed 65 signatures and a $3,500 entry fee?

Don't laugh.

Remember, they laughed in 1966 when an actor they called "Dutch," who co-starred with a chimp in his best remembered role, decided to run for governor. Movie stars have been lusting for political roles ever since a tap dancer named Murphy was elected senator in the '60s.

And remember Sonny Bono, too.

He played the caboose in the duo of Sonny and Cher until Cher dumped him and he cast about himself for something to do. Of course, he ran for Congress in 1994 and won. When he died in a skiing mishap four years later, his widow, Mary, won his seat.

Mary Bono, a Tae Kwan Do instructor by trade, had to beat a TV actor, Ralph Waite, better known as "Pop" Walton on "The Waltons." Ralph was handicapped in the race since he was committed to play Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman" six times a week.

Jesse Ventura, the pro wrestler who became governor of Minnesota, was also lesser known as an actor; in fact, he played alongside Arnold in the movie "Predator" and even had a speaking role, to wit, "I ain't got time to bleed."

Incidentally, Jesse's legal name is still James George Janos; he picked his stage name from a map of California. But I digress . . .

Fred Grandy, who played "Gopher" on the long-running TV series "The Love Boat" and roomed with David Eisenhower in prep school, was elected to Congress from Iowa, and Ben Jones, the mechanic "Cooter" on TV's popular "The Dukes of Hazzard," was a congressman from Georgia.

And who knows? Maybe someday an actor will be president of the Uni . . .

Romney can count Bulger's resignation as a victory

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

William Bulger made an amazing number of friends and enemies in 42 years, but the way he'll probably be remembered by the public can best be captured by going to Mass.gov and entering "Bulger" in the search box. The first search result delivers not William's name, but Whitey's.

Bulger's resignation as president of UMass played in the press as a victory of one strong political personality over another, and that's valid. At the same time, larger issues and forces contributed to the resignation, the major development of the week on Beacon Hill.

Bulger's departure was seen as Romney's biggest win since taking office. In some ways it resembled the governor's initial victory, back in November. That win certainly didn't come because Romney ran a brilliant campaign; pros agreed it was tied with Shannon O'Brien's for "mediocre." But in campaigns adjudged roughly even in message and tactics, in Massachusetts, the Democrat always wins. She lost – because the voting base has shifted, to suburban, more affluent, and more conservative.

That dynamic repeated when the Democratic power establishment closed ranks to defend Bulger against Romney, to no avail. Bulger had the votes in the short term, but in the long run support was running Romney's way. His base approved the message Romney was delivering about Bulger, as embodiment of the urban politics whose time has passed, where backs are for scratching or stabbing.

The governor's appeal to the voters who rejected the Democrats and put him in the StateHouse is based on reform. This spring, he somehow managed to have dozens of his proposals for reform adopted in the Legislature, while simultaneously selling the message, "they won't let me change things!"

In a way, it was the opposite with the Bulger situation: Romney's actual proposals for change in the UMass organization and leadership structure failed to impress almost anyone, including his business allies. But his message – "we need change, and it starts with Bulger" – got through. He lost several battles over Bulger, and UMass, but won the war. Bulger blamed politics for the outcome, but it was more than that.

Romney lost several battles over Bulger, and UMass, but won the war. Bulger blamed politics for the outcome, but it was more than that.

All his life, and certainly after 40 years in the business, Bulger understood the most important resource a politician has is votes, and his were shifting away. The trustees at UMass were prepared to continue supporting him. But the US House Committee on Government Reform continued looking at the FBI's use of informants like Bulger's notorious brother, James, and whether William Bulger misstated the truth in any way when he testified in June. Trustees increasingly were signaling their discomfort with the president's continued presence. They were hearing from their constituents that the situation with Bulger was damaging the school's image, and knew Bulger could not have his full-time attention on the school. They also knew Romney was not going to relent in his Bulger-quest.

The institution is the biggest of the big issues overhanging the flashy drama now concluding. Romney made his point, and proved it, and looks potent doing so. But now Bulger's gone, and the bigger substantive problems remain — restoring UMass, getting it better funded and better managed, delivering a higher-quality education and linking it to the economic needs of the state. It's fascinating: by taking out Bulger, Romney's made those his problems.

Much of the wrangling over Bulger had to do with Election 2004; that approaching vote was in the news in other ways as well.

• Groups file 14 proposals covering seven topics for ballot questions — Attorney General Thomas Reilly received 14 petitions for potential ballot questions — both initiative petitions and constitutional amendments — by the 5 p.m. deadline. A list of topics can be found at www.02133.org under "2003-04 Ballot Questions."

• Finneran scores health care proposal — It didn't take long for House Speaker Thomas Finneran to weigh in on one of the proposals submitted last week. Sitting in as a guest host on WRKO-AM the next morning, Finneran said any state that adopts universal health care would be bankrupt within 14 months. Finneran said he laughed when he learned later health care access would be a constitutional right under a proposed constitutional amendment.

• Committee will give death penalty another month — The Criminal Justice Committee put off action on death penalty bills last week, saying it wanted to give Romney more time to move on his commission to examine death penalty legislation in Massachusetts. Romney announced he planned to form the commission June 18, but no product has been announced. Those most familiar with the issue say the votes are not there in the Legislature to advance capital punishment.

• Romney backs lawrence school chief in language flap— Lawrence school Superintendent Wilfredo Laboy failed a mandatory test of his English proficiency, but Gov. Romney and Board of Education Chairman James Peyser said Laboy should have the chance to retake the test. He suspended 24 teachers in Lawrence recently for their failure to pass the proficiency test they took.

• Romney will cut back emergency assistance benefit — Leslie Lawrence, associate director of the Massachusetts Coalition for the Homeless, decried the news that the Department of Transitional Assistance plans to reduce the emergency assistance benefit for disabled and elderly welfare recipients to $268 a month, from $303. The program was underfunded in this year's budget. "I didn't see it coming," said Lawrence. "This program has had a lot of support in the past from the Legislature. This is the first year that the Legislature has cut this program. I would suspect that there will be a great deal of concern when people come back from their vacations and find that another 11 percent cut has been proposed." Lawrence said program recipients also recently lost a $35 monthly rent stipend.

• Mass. Borrowers will share $13.4m settlement — Attorney General Reilly announced that about 13,000 defrauded borrowers in Massachusetts will split $13.4 million to settle allegations of predatory lending practices and fraud against Household Finance Corp. and Beneficial. The payments are part of a nationwide package under which the companies will pay $484 million.

• Court officer charged with check theft — Kevin O'Brien, a longtime House court officer, was charged with embezzlement in Boston Municipal Court. He allegedly cashed the paychecks of another worker who had inadvertently been left on the payroll after leaving her job as a page.

• Groups push to get out the word about prescription plan — With just a month to sign up seniors for Prescription Advantage, groups like the AARP were doing all they can to get the word out about the open enrollment period. Press releases and radio spots abounded. The program was saved with federal help and budget maneuvering this spring and summer.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on three roll calls from earlier July sessions. All of the roll call votes are on legislative action surrounding Gov. Romney's overrides of items in the $22.1 billion fiscal 2004 state budget.

COMMONWEALTH COLLEGE (H 4004)

House 143-11, Senate 33-6, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $1,715,000 funding for the operation of the Commonwealth College honors program at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Commonwealth College currently enrolls some 2500 students who must meet high academic standards including a 3.4 high school grade point average, 1300 combined SAT score and a class ranking in the top ten percent of their graduating class. Override supporters said this innovative college for gifted students boasts a class size of less than 25 students per class, offers many unique opportunities for its students and attracts some of the state's brightest learners to a state college. They argued that Romney's veto is politically motivated and is directed at UMass President William Bulger who played a key role in establishing the program. Override opponents said they did not necessarily oppose the program but noted it should be funded out of the overall UMass budget. They argued that the funds would be available from the UMass budget if appropriate cuts and reforms were made in the UMass President's Office. (A "Yea" vote is for the $1,715,000. A "Nay" vote is against the $1,715,000).

EARLY LITERACY PROGRAMS (H 4004)

House 138-15, Senate 33-6, overrode Governor Romney's $2,100,004 million veto reduction (from 3,892,994 to $1,792,990) in funding for the John Silber early literacy grant program to promote school-wide literacy education and literacy among children from kindergarten through third grade. Override supporters said these grants are used to promote literacy through many avenues including the funding of salaries of reading specialists. They argued the program is important to cities and towns and would help ensure that children in primary schools across the state can read and learn. Some override opponents said it is an unpleasant necessity to reduce funding for good programs but argued that the state cannot afford the additional $2,100,004 during this fiscal crisis. Other override opponents said the grants are often unfairly awarded to large cities at the expense of many smaller communities that could use the money but cannot afford to hire professional grant writers to apply for it. (A "Yea" vote is for the $2,100,004. A "Nay" vote is against the $2,100,004).

COMPULSIVE GAMBLERS' TREATMENT (H 4004)

House 131-25, Senate 34-5, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $654,942 in funding for a compulsive gamblers' treatment program. The program is funded by money from unclaimed Massachusetts State Lottery prizes and from a state law that requires one-half of one percent of Massachusetts' net revenue from the multi-state Big Game Mega Millions lottery to go to a gamblers' treatment program. Override supporters said this program is important and argued that if the state is operating a gambling business, it should also take responsibility for the damage it causes. They noted that the funds pay for private contracts with groups including the Massachusetts Council on Compulsive Gambling. Some override opponents questioned how many people are actually served and helped by these treatment programs and noted the anonymous component of these programs makes it difficult to determine if they are effective or are even being used by a lot of people. Other override opponents argued that the state simply does not have sufficient money to fund these programs during the fiscal crisis. (A "Yea" vote is for the $654,942. A "Nay" vote is against the $654,942).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

FALSE EMERGENCY CALLS (H 1636)- The Criminal Justice Committee gave a favorable report to a bill imposing up to a 2.5 year prison sentence and/or $10,000 fine on anyone who knowingly makes a false call about an alleged emergency situation that threatens the life or safety of persons.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY ON A CHILD (S 163)- The Criminal Justice Committee gave a favorable report to legislation increasing from five to 20 years the maximum jail sentence for assault and battery that causes bodily injury to a child under the age of 14. The measure also expands the definition of bodily injury to include internal injuries resulting from the offender giving drugs or alcohol to the child.

DEATH PENALTY BILLS- The Criminal Justice Committee did not take action at its executive session last week on several bills, aired at a public hearing in March, to reinstate the death penalty in Massachusetts. The committee decided to hold the proposals and will likely have another public hearing next month in order to allow the Romney administration to testify. Members of the administration did not testify at the March hearing.

Crocker sails to first place at Pan American Games

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

For most children who begin sailing at the Cohasset Yacht Club, dreams of winning competitions and taking a trip to the Olympics rarely come to fruition. But for Davenport Crocker, that dream is coming true.

Thirty-five year old Crocker left to compete in the Pan American games held Aug. 1-17 in the Dominican Republic, and will return home a gold medal winner.

"We're absolutely not believing this. It's quite exciting," said his mother, Jane.

Davenport, who currently lives on Beacon Hill, has sailed in Cohasset virtually all his life, and is one apple that didn't fall far from the family tree, as his grandparents, parents, brother and sister all sail as well.

"He loved it from day one," Jane said.

Davenport sailed and competed throughout high school, but took a break from the sport while attending college. After landing a job at Waterline Systems in Newport R.I., he began sailing on a regular basis as part of his job requirements.

Davenport and his teammates, skipper Tim Healy, Newport, and crew members Nick Judson, Nantucket, and Gordon Borges, Newport, all met through the sailing community while in Rhode Island. They qualified to compete in the Pan American Games in January and have been planning for the race ever since.

Davenport and his team raced as part of the USA's 13-member Pan American Team-Sailing in the J/24 class. But this is not the first victory the team has shared. Together, they won second place at the 2002 J/24 Worlds, and also won the J/24 North American Championship in 2000 and 2001. The team also won the J/24 Mid-Winter Championships in both 2001 and 2002, proving they are the perfect balance for success.

Davenport Crocker and his team raced as part of the USA's 13-member Pan American Team-Sailing in the J/24 class.

The Pan American Games, which have been held every four years since their inception in 1951, are held every four years during the summer preceding the Olympics. They are attended by athletes from 42 nations in North, Central and South America as well as the Caribbean, who compete in 288 events encompassing 36 sports, of which 28 are Olympic.

For Davenport, the training and preparation that went into sailing in the Pan American Games will hopefully help him accomplish his next sailing goal — competing in next year's Olympics in Athens, Greece.

Cohasset's Davenport Crocker

But racing sailboats is not all Davenport has been planning for. Shortly after qualifying for the race, he became engaged and has been planning for his wedding, which will be held Aug. 23.

Jane said that his current victory is thrilling and a wonderful accomplishment to have just before his wedding.

"[Sailing] is the love of his life, except his bride to be," she said.

But even with all the glory of winning the race, Jane said her son is just happy to be able to participate.

"He said, win, lose, or draw, it's such a treat and an honor to be representing his country."

One exception, however, is the purple loosestrife that is usually found in wetlands and has taken up residence on the island.

"I don't know how it survives because it likes to have its feet wet," Cushing said.

Cushing said when choosing plants for the island, she is careful to incorporate many different varieties with different shapes and colors, to represent the different kinds of people living in her neighborhood. She said her neighborhood has everyone from surgeons to skilled laborers, who each have their own distinct strength and beauty. She wanted her island garden to celebrate the differences and be symbolic for anyone entering the neighborhood.

"Sometimes it's beautiful and sometimes it looks like a weed patch," she said, noting people often do as well.

"It's one way I can serve the community."
— Maryanne Cushing, Beechwood Street

As a school psychologist, Cushing has the summers off and said "it's a real shift to be a gardener."

Because of her busy fall schedule, which includes not only work, but tending to her two children, Cushing said she wouldn't be able to serve on a committee or other town position. However, by keeping up the island, "It's one way I can serve the community," she said.

Cushing said her love of gardening is probably a result of the influence of her father who passed away a couple of years ago. Her father, a gardener of German heritage, said he would always leave a place he lived more beautiful than it was. Cushing said his words have really been an inspiration for her and have instilled in her a strong value of nurturing the land.

"We only live on the earth for so long. We're all caretakers," she said.

Last month, the Mariner featured the Village Renaissance Committee and this week, Mary Anne Cushing. If you know an individual, group or organization that volunteers to help keep Cohasset looking beautiful, please contact Samantha Brown at (781) 741-2935 or via e-mail at sambrown@cnc.com.

ENVIRONMENTALLY FRIENDLY GARDENS

"We began organic gardening at the request of Barbara Angline of the Secret Gardener in Plymouth," says Mary Michel, 77 Jerusalem Road. "She explained to us the harm pesticides have on Little Harbor, its wild life, and people. We have been practicing organic land care for six years. We use manure, a fish and seaweed fertilizer, and compost."

The Open Space Committee will be featuring properties in Cohasset that practice organic land care. If you would like to participate in the program, please call Mary Michel at 781-383-0450.

This is the first in a series of photos of organic gardens and lawns around Cohasset. The Board of Health and the Open Space Committee have teamed up to raise awareness of the importance of proper lawn care on our health and the environment. This garden was created by Mary Michel and Eric Richter at 77 Jerusalem Road.

Partnership could design welcome mat for affordable housing

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

It's no secret that Cohasset is an expensive place to live. According to the housing section of the Cohasset Master Plan, which is still in draft form, the median price of a single family house in town doubled to $617,000 from 1990 to 2001.

The 2000 US Census shows Cohasset has fewer young adults than other towns in the 20-34 age category, which could be a reflection of the town's "limited housing options for young families and singles," the Master Plan states.

Cohasset also has a higher percentage of seniors over 65 than average and as their numbers grow, the demand for smaller homes or dedicated housing for seniors could go up. How to keep some level of affordability in town — so Cohasset doesn't become solely a haven for the rich — is a challenge acknowledged by the Growth and Development Committee whose draft of the Master Plan includes an "Affordable Housing Plan."

To help meet that challenge, selectmen are establishing a Cohasset Housing Partnership which would help facilitate the development of affordable and senior housing. The Partnership will have a seven members, which appointed by selectmen. It will also include a selectman, member of the Planning Board, and the Cohasset Housing Authority. Members would be assisted by a part-time salaried expert in state and federal housing matters.

"We need superstars on this committee."
— Peter Pratt, Growth and Development Committee

The Master Plan is being drafted to serve as a blueprint for the direction the town could take with proper planning, and will address land use, economic development, open space, and other various town initiatives.

Through the Affordable Housing Plan component of the Master Plan, the Partnership would work with all public and private local interests, developers, land trusts, and other state and federal organizations, to take a "town-driven" approach to housing development which adheres with the goals of the Master Plan.

Planning Board member Peter Pratt, who also sits on the Growth and Development Committee, said he thinks the Partnership will provide a way for the town to create alternatives for affordable housing.

"Avalon is a wake-up call for the town. Clearly, the town hasn't been proactive in that area," Pratt said.

Because there is such a need for affordable housing in town, projects like Avalon could help eliminate the shortage. However, with many members of the community against 40B projects, the Partnership could help devise other alternatives.

Avalon, a 200-unit luxury apartment complex proposed off Route 3A with 25 percent of the units set aside as affordable, would help the town meet its 10 percent affordable housing threshold. Currently, the town only has 76 affordable units, or roughly 3 percent. By filing under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, Avalon's developers are allowed to skirt some local zoning laws. And residents are worried the development would put too much demand on town services.

Members for the Partnership have not been selected yet, but Pratt hopes volunteers will step up to the plate.

"We need superstars on this committee," said Pratt, adding that people who are knowledgeable in construction and development, law and government, as well as finances would all be good candidates for the positions.

The Partnership will be working with not only the Housing Authority and Senior Housing Committee, but the major land boards in town, including the Planning Board, Zoning Board and Conservation Commission.

"It's a huge job," Pratt said, but he feels the Partnership will provide a much needed service for the town.

Citizens interested in serving on the Partnership should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

Swimmers wash away all comers

Cohasset Swim Team repeats at SSSL champions

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It appears that things are back to normal in the South Shore Swim League. Cohasset is back on top.

After a hard-contested back-and forth battle between the Cohasset Swim Team, the Scituate Knights of Columbus team and MASK (Marshfield Area Swim Klub) at Friday's SSSL championships, the locals finally pulled ahead at the end to take first place for the second year in a row with a total of 594 points. The Scituate K of C squad took a close second with 546, and Marshfield Area Swim Club was third with 530 points.

The 150-member aquatic army from the Cohasset Swim Center won the Swimmer's Cup for seven consecutive years in the 1990's, warding off any and all teams who emerged as the year's top contender to unseat CSC. The Aqua-Dux of Duxbury began recruiting Gators, the Marshfield Area Swim Klub (MASK) coaches managed to acquire year round MASK swimmers as ringers for the big meets, and the Scituate Knights of Columbus (K of C) simply built up a program in much the same way Cohasset had a decade earlier: more swimmers translates into more talented swimmers. They still have the largest team in the league.

"With the amount of US Swimmers K of C had, and all the amazing year-round swimmers on MASK, I thought the only way we would win championships would be if every one on our side swam their absolute best. The fact that we pulled it out just speaks volumes for the hard work of the kids."

CST swimmer/assistant coach Meredith Nelson

But each year during the incredible run of titles, by far the longest in the league's 30-plus year history, Cohasset managed to come out on top. Finally, the team's streak halted in 2000, as MASK simply became too powerful, presenting a championships line-up consisting almost exclusively of winter-swimming phenoms.

In 2001, Scituate K of C swimmers rejoiced upon winning their first SSSL title in the club's history, taking their final step towards acknowledgement as one of the legitimate forces on the south shore.

Yet Cohasset took back the Cup last year, thanks to a re-doubled effort fueled by the losses the previous two years. And this year, the team won once again (after another undefeated dual meet season), a sign that the two year absence of the Cup on Sohier Street was nothing more than a hiccup in a streak that could and should continue for many more years.

"With the amount of US Swimmers K of C had, and all the amazing year-round swimmers on MASK, I thought the only way we would win championships would be if every one on our side swam their absolute best," noted CSC swimmer/assistant coach Meredith Nelson, a converted MASK superstar. "The fact that we pulled it out just speaks volumes for the hard work of the kids."

The meet, held for the second straight year at the gorgeous facilities of the Duxbury Yacht Club, was held last Friday. For years, the meet was held at Wheaton College in Norton,

Up to the challenge

Hard work helps Krupczak make smooth transition to college track

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The switch from high school sports to college athletics can be one of the most shocking transitions an athlete can undergo. One who may have dominated the field all through his high school years may find himself struggling simply to land a spot on an NCAA squad.

Not Brian Krupczak.

Krupczak, CHS class of 2001, was in a class by himself during his athletic career in Blue. A two-time state champion 200 meter sprinter and a football tailback who compiled 1,500 yards and 14 touchdowns his senior year, Krupczak is still at the top of his game, now competing at Virginia's Washington and Lee University.

Krupczak now competes in the Old Dominion Athletic Conference (ODAC), a league as intense about athletics as it is about academics, where he has emerged as the top sprinter on

Gunners quick on the draw

Cohasset booters take second in Plymouth Summer League

The boys from Cohasset have what it takes to compete with the best. The Plymouth Summer League, held at the Plymouth Sports Dome, consists of 6 v 6 play, with 10 teams entered consisting mainly of high school players preparing for their fall season.

The Gunners were ranked third when it came down to the semifinals, with Division II Silver Lake Regional School second with no losses and Division I Nauset High School first with no losses.

Entering into the semifinal, the Gunners held the disadvantage of having no substitutes and their goalie away on vacation. The Gunners were down by several points before the end of the first half when their hearts and soles kicked in and they started scoring. Silver Lake,

All-Scholastic girls lacrosse team

Cohasset's McKenney named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

Cohasset junior Nicole Turgiss, an Honorable Mention, was a particularly difficult omission. She actually wound up edging All-Scholastic teammate Maura McKenney for the team goal-scoring race with 42. The good news, though, is she gets another shot at All-Scholastic honors next spring. Recent CHS grads Julie Lordan and Catherine Coyne, both defensive stalwarts these last four years for the Lady Skippers, likewise received some genuine consideration.

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 12 and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top female lacrosse players in Marinerland for this honor:

Maura McKenney - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Cohasset

This two-time Mariner All-Scholastic finished up her career with 118 goals, including 41 this season to go along with 15 assists...helped the Lady Skippers to their second consecutive postseason berth...tallied two goals and two assists in state tourney loss to Milton...a very athletic and well rounded player who worked hard at both ends of the field...two-time team MVP...Pilgrim Conference All-Star...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...had 54 goals and 22 assists as a junior...also a standout for the Cohasset High soccer and ski teams...was Class Treasurer...will attend UMass-Amherst, which has a Div. 1 lacrosse program, and may try to make the team as a walk-on in her sophomore year...has not declared a major, but is considering journalism...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Maura really came on as an unbelievably strong scorer the last two seasons. You can tell how hard she worked on her game, and she seemed to take it to another level against better competition. She's a phenomenal defensive player too."

Cohasset's Maura McKenney ended her high school lacrosse career with 118 goals and two Mariner All-Scholastic honorings.

Hilary Lynch - Senior (Capt.)
Goalie - Hingham

Hilary Lynch

No question here...Lynch was one of the best goalies in the state and beyond this season, earning an Honorable Mention to the All-American team...Was nearly untouchable, allowing just 88 goals in 17 games for a 5.18 goals against average...After splitting time with 2002 grad Ashley Baxter, Lynch got the full-time role this season and proved immense...The senior captain and Pilgrim Conference All-star consistently came up with big saves against some of the area's best attackers, helping to lead the Harborwomen (13-5) to their 11th straight PC title and to the quarterfinals of the South Sectional tourney...There, they fell to rival and eventual state champs, Westwood…Lynch was in the net in the second half of the Harborwomen's state championship win over Winchester in 2001…Lynch received the team MVP award…A three-sport athlete at HHS, Lynch captained the soccer and basketball teams, earning All-Scholastic honors for each. Lynch will continue her lacrosse career on scholarship at the University of California at Berkeley. Hingham coach Kristin Aylward: "Opposing teams always knew they'd have to play tougher with her in the net. She's an outstanding player and leader. I feel lucky to have been her coach."

Colleen Lenhart - Senior (Capt.) Midfield - Hingham

Colleen Lenhart

A midfielder her sophomore and junior year, this Pilgrim Conference All-star's talents were a bit overshadowed by a pair of standout attackers, but this season, Lenhart shined…The recent grad was the team's leading scorer this season with 68 points on 34 goals, 34 assists…Cited by her coach as the "fastest player on the team", Lenhart's quickness proved deadly on a fast break, yet her patience in the offensive zone helped control the pace of the game…Her skills offensively helped Hingham capture its 11th-straight Pilgrim Conference title and brief run in the South Sectional tourney…Also a soccer player at HHS, Lenhart was president of her senior class, a member of the National Honor Society, Latin Club, and student council…Teammates voted her the Best Midfielder…The PC All-star plans to attend the University of Florida in the fall and play club lacrosse. Hingham coach Kristin Aylward: "She was very coachable; always wanting to know how to get better. She's a very experienced and smart player. She knows how to slow the offense down and move the ball around."

Lauren Murphy - Senior (Capt.) Third man - Hingham

Lauren Murphy

A three-sport standout at HHS, Murphy had a nose for defense… A stalwart on the soccer field and basketball court, Murphy was also one of the best defenders around on the lacrosse field…Aggressive, but never too much so, this Pilgrim Conference All-star caused fits for several of the area's best, including a high-scoring sophomore pair from Duxbury, resulting in a 9-4 win and 11th straight PC title…Also scored 6 goals, three assists…A captain on the HHS team, Murphy's confidence in the backfield helped lead Hingham (13-5) to the South Sectional quarterfinals…She was a member of the Harborwomen's 2001 state title team…An All-Scholastic in soccer and basketball, Murphy plans to continue her lacrosse career at Tufts University. Hingham coach Kristin Aylward: "Lauren has no fear. We always put her on the opponents' best attacker and she'd take them on. She has the speed in the midfield to shut down opponents' transition game and always knows exactly where she has to be."

Margot Spatola - Sophomore Attack - Hingham

Margot Spatola

After seeing limited time last season, Spatola got a starting gig this year and proved she deserved it…This speedy attacker was the second leading scorer on the Harborwomen squad, netting 50 points on 33 goals, 17 assists…Her small frame made her a terror to defend and her trademark cuts and rolls made her legendary amongst her teammates…Deadly on a fast break, Spatola's play helped Hingham capture its 11th-straight Pilgrim Conference title and reach the quarterfinals of the South Sectional tourney…Spatola was named the "Best Offensive Player" by her teammates…A PC All-star, she plays for the Mass. Elite lacrosse team…A standout on the HHS soccer team and a basketball player to boot, Spatola will return to all three teams next season. Hingham coach Kristin Aylward: "She can really play any position. She has moves, great dodges, perfect rolls. We were stunned by what she could do on the field. Some people have the moves but don't have the quickness to blow by a defender. She does. She's awesome."

Lauren Jentzen - Junior Attack - Marshfield

Lauren Jentzen

Racked up an impressive 74 points on 53 goals and 21 assists to lead the team and rank fifth among the Pilgrim Conference…Her quickness and confidence were among her greatest assets this season, in which Marshfield won the most games in its program's history…The Lady Rams went 5-10-1 this season after winning just a single game in each of its previous two…Jentzen's performance this season landed her on the PC All-star team…A standout forward on the MHS soccer team, Jentzen was made our All-Scholastic squad…She also plays basketball at MHS…Jentzen will return to captain the soccer and lacrosse squads next season. Marshfield coach Sue Collins: "She's tenacious after the ball, but is also an unselfish player. She recognizes when she needs to pass. She's very competitive."

Erica Murphy - Sr. (Capt.) Midfield - Weymouth

Erica Murphy

Was a standout attacker on the young, five-year-old Lady Wildcats squad… Playing in the competitive Bay State League (home to five-time state champs Needham), Murphy received an All-star nod for the second-straight season…Was the second-leading scorer on the team netting 30 goals for the Lady Wildcats…A quick and aggressive player, Murphy played equally well in the offensive and defensive midfield…Murphy was a four-year varsity player for Weymouth and two-year captain on the team…Also a basketball All-Scholastic last winter, Murphy plans to continue her hoop career at Western Kentucky. Weymouth coach Chris Dion: "Erica was very goal oriented. She was certainly a very strong and aggressive player both offensively and defensively. She was very quick, which enabled her to get back on defense. She was very knowledgeable of where she had to go and covered a lot of ground for us."

Lisa Thomas - Senior Third home - Weymouth

Lisa Thomas

Worked hand-in-hand with fellow All-Scholastic Erica Murphy in providing the bulk of the offense on the young Weymouth lax team…Thomas was the Lady Wildcats' leading scorer this season, scoring 32 goals…Her slick stick skills were her greatest attribute on the field, effortlessly switching from right to left in the cradle…Had the ability to score multiple goals in several games this season, including a six-goal effort against Walpole…A good motivator on and off the field, Thomas got her teammates to participate on an indoor lacrosse team during the preseason…A Bay State League All-star this season, Thomas plans to attend Springfield College. Weymouth coach Chris Dion: "She and Erica worked very well together. They always knew where the other would be. She was a very effective offensive player and was a great motivator."

Minnie Doherty - Senior (Capt.) Midfield - Norwell

Minnie Doherty

This is Minnie's second Mariner All-Scholastic selection for lacrosse, and third overall by the Mariner… tallied 58 goals and 38 assists to lead the Lady Clippers lacrosse team to an 11-7 record and its third consecutive postseason berth…after scoring only a handful of goals last season, she picked it up dramatically this spring, helping to fill the shoes of all-time Lady Clippers scorer Liz Ghilardi…this well-rounded athlete has devoted more and more attention to lacrosse the last few years, and has quickly developed in to one of the most versatile players in the area…two-time Pilgrim Conference all-star…moved back and forth between defense and midfield this season, depending on match-ups…also a standout in soccer and basketball at Norwell High… for soccer this past fall, she was named a Mariner All-Scholastic, MVP of the South Shore League and an Eastern Mass. All-Star…active in Student Government…a volunteer with "Best Buddies", a program that pairs core curriculum students up with Special Needs students…has accepted a partial scholarship from Northwestern University to play lacrosse…also plays ice hockey in her spare time (what there is of it, anyway)… Norwell coach Jen Kent: "Minnie was probably our top athlete. We needed her to become more of an offensive force this year, and she responded unbelievably. She was already a force out there, but she became an offensive force too. She was very dependable and a great team leader. She's been with me since the beginning, and we'll really miss her next year."

Colby Tallman - Junior Attack Wing - Norwell

Colby Tallman

Wound up the Lady Clippers top scorer with 103 points (67 goals, 36 assists), playing a huge role in their 11-7 season and third consecutive postseason berth…finished top five in the state in scoring… scored three goals and added an assist in state tourney loss to Needham, 11-6, pushing her points total over 100 for the season…possesses great quickness and a hard, accurate shot…a member of the gold medal winning Southeast team at this summer's Bay State Games… has played for the Mass Elite lacrosse team the past two years…also a basketball and soccer standout at NHS…was President of her junior high class…Honor Roll student with a 3.4 GPA…working as a counselor at a youth basketball camp in Hingham this summer…has also coached youth soccer…has already received letters of interest from more than 20 college lacrosse coaches, among them Holy Cross, Connecticut College and Washington Lee…would like to study either sports medicine or sports management in college…Norwell coach Jen Kent: "Colby is a phenomenal lacrosse players, really, I think, one of the best in the state. She's played in some major competition this summer. Obviously, we're expecting some really big things from her next season."

Lauren Glancy - Senior (Capt.) Attack - Scituate

Lauren Glancy

Bounced back from a serious knee injury (torn ACL) suffered in the fall soccer season to score a team best 55 goals for the Lady Sailors this season and earn her second straight Mariner All-Scholastic selection…after missing all of the winter ski season due to the injury, Lauren was forced to wear a heavy knee brace and started the spring season slow, but came on strong at the end to help the Lady Sailors win eight of their final nine games after they'd lost their first eight…scored 19 of her goals during a late season three game winning streak over New Bedford, Barnstable and Marshfield… this phenomenal sharp shooter set a school record for goals scored with 73 as a junior, helping the Lady Sailors to their first ever state tourney berth that season…a three-time member of the Bay State Games South lacrosse team…also a standout for Scituate High's soccer and ski teams, and was a captain in those two sports as well this year…Honor Roll Student…teaches tennis…was heavily recruited by several colleges before the knee injury…will attend St. Amselms, where she will major in nursing and play lacrosse…Scituate coach Paula Evans: "Lauren worked hard to develop in to a more complete player this year. She's a force on the attack, and she held her own on defense too. She really concentrated on that part of her game."

Suzanne Belmont - Senior (Capt.) Center Defense - Scituate

Suzanne Belmont

Suzanne emerged as a major force this spring with a defensive unit that had been hit hard by graduation… played a key role in developing several first year varsity players around her, as well as in the Lady Sailors late season charge to win eight of their final nine games, falling just one win shy of postseason qualification…won the team's Sportsmanship Award…Pilgrim Conference All-Star…tallied 12 goals and seven assists this season despite playing a primarily defensive role…lead the team in ground ball pickups…an extremely aggressive player…plays indoor lacrosse in the off season…also a varsity basketball standout at SHS…a Student Counsel member… involved heavily in art and singing…was a member of the SHS jazz choir and chorus…a high honors student and National Honors Society member…will attend Hamilton College in Connecticut, and hopes to play varsity lacrosse…undecided on a major having not lost a game yet, was in shock over the change of events as the Gunners rode to a 9-6 win.

With a 10 minute break between games, the Gunners caught their breath and prepared to play Nauset, who has won the league title for the past three years. Earlier in the week with a full roster, the Gunners played Nauset in a very challenging game that could be described only as ugly resulting in a 7-1 loss.

The Gunners were not going to have a repeat performance of their most recent game with Nauset and took the high road. There were no stars on the team this day, but a constellation of teammates supporting one another and giving 110%. As the Nauset team came off the field winded between their full lineup substitutions, the Gunners continued to play their best right through to the end of the 5-3 loss.

The Gunners consist of varsity captains Conor Buick, David Santiago and Chris Clark. Also on the team is Craig Laugelle, Jesse Brewer, Andrew Wise, Jon Andrade, John Oronte, Aidan Buick, Matt O'Connell and Ben Libby.

MA, but shifted in 2002. The switch was slightly inconvenient, for the 6-lane pool meant that all races would be run in double heats.

Still, it is a fast pool, and one that Cohasset has a winning streak competing in that dates back to the early 80s.

The way the league is structured, with two teams in Marshfield, Duxbury and Scituate, and one team from Cohasset, Kingston, Plymouth and Hanover each, the teams play a nine meet head-to-head schedule. The season culminates in an all-league championships, and the winner of that meet takes home the title.

While this structure lends little importance to the dual meets, it is still rather impressive that Cohasset has not lost a full regular season competition in the eight years that a Hughes has been the head coach.

Allison Hughes won five championships in her seven years as the head coach, while her younger brother Roger E. Hughes, of Norwell, took over this summer.

So the CSC all-stars proved last week that it matters not who is coaching, who the competition is, or how the meet is run. A tradition of excellence is now entrenched in any Cohasset swimmer. That type of legacy is not likely to run thin any time soon.

The Cohasset team took 13 first place finishes in the 64 events, along with 16 seconds and 13 seconds.

his team, and one of the top in the area. Still, the competition he finds is fierce, in ODAC dual meets and beyond. Whereas Krupczak could effortlessly waltz to victory in high school, he has lifted his training regimen (which anyone who knew him in high school can tell you was maniacal) to new heights.

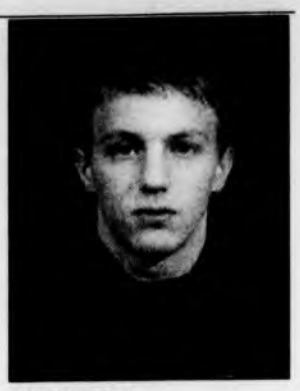
"There's no meet where you are guaranteed a win," noted the college junior. "Every meet we go to, there is always someone pushing you to do your best."

At the All-Conference meet, comparable to an invitational or elites meet in high school, Krupczak was one of his school's top performers. He finished seventh in the 100 meter dash with a time of 11.48, and took 11th in the 200 meters with 23.88. However, his major contribution to his team's point total came in the field, with Krupczak taking fourth in the long jump with a leap over 21 and a half feet.

Krupczak finished third in the 200 meter dash (22.57) and second in the long jump (6.28 meters) at the EMU Royal Invitational in March, recording the season's top performances for himself, and for anyone on the team. His season best in the 100 came during dual meet competition, when Krupczak came through with a 11.02 to win the race. However, breaking 11 seconds remains his intangible foe.

"That's definitely one of my goals," Krupczak affirms of getting within 10+ range. "It is something that makes me work harder during the offseason."

Although a hurt hamstring hampered Krupczak's freshman year, he was not phased. Krupczak had experience dealing with a similar injury during his senior year of high school, a time when any athlete would wish for the opportunity to stay with the team. Yet he manages to chalk it up to standard procedure for a trackster.



Brian Krupczak.

"It was a little frustrating," Krupczak says of both injured spells. "It's one of those things. If you're a track athlete, you always have something. I tried to come back a little too early [senior year]. I just worked really hard over the summer."

While injuries were his downfall freshman year, however, they actually helped Krupczak explode onto the Div III track circuit. Another hamstring tweak to a Washington and Lee sprint specialist, this one to highly touted Chris Sullivan of San Antonio, this past spring left Krupczak alone as the top short distance man on the team.

Needless to say, he made the most of it, earning the title of W&L's Athlete of the Week for March 24-31 and the respect of many surrounding coaches.

"Several coaches actually came up to me and remarked about how much I've improved," mentioned Krupczak. "I just try to do what I can to stay in shape."

His main focus for the next two years will be getting the always-elusive bid to the nationals competition. As of now, he must add about eight inches to his long jump. With his steady improvement in the event, that may be very attainable. Taking off the mere tenths it would take in the sprints to qualify may prove to be far more difficult.

Oh, and by the way, Krupczak also played tailback during the fall of his sophomore year for the 5-5 Washington and Lee football team, and made Dean's list, the top academic standing.

Doesn't look like he was shocked out of being his old self.

Panagia Golf Classic is Aug. 25

More than 100 golfers are expected to compete for up to $100,000 in cash prizes at the 2003 Annual Panagia Golf Classic, a Florida scramble, on Monday, Aug. 25 with an 8:30 a.m. shotgun start at Widow's Walk Golf Course in Scituate. A luncheon at The Barker Tavern in Scituate will follow the tournament, where radio-show host, Norm Resha of "Calling All Sports" will emcee the raffle and auction.

The third annual event will benefit the new community center of the historic Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church on Jerusalem Road in Cohasset. The church was built in 1895-1900 by Col. Alfred Pope, in memory of his son Alexander, and is designed in the Richardson style (like Trinity Church in Copley Square, Boston). The new community center, designed by Gaffney Associates of Dennis will complement the original church.

In 1980, the church became the place of worship for a parish of now more than 200 Greek Orthodox families, now under the guidance of Rev. Fr. John G. Maheras of Scituate. The tournament's name, "Panagia" is Greek for "Most Holy One," and refers to the Virgin Mary.

We've broken ground and have all the necessary plans and permits," said tournament director Gerry Leneweaver of Scituate, "and we're eager to begin construction of our new community center which will accommodate the ever-increasing needs of our growing parish."

Golfers at the Panagia Tournament will shoot in five hole-in-one contests on all of Widow's Walk's par threes. Hole-in-one prizes will include, among other significant prizes, a 28-foot Four Winds Cruiser, compliments of 3A Marine Service of Hingham. In a closest-to-the-pin shootout, golfers will have a chance to win $100,000 in cash and $2,500 in a f0-foot putting contest.

"We expect another sellout," Leneweaver said. "At our past two tournaments, we had players who traveled from as far as Pennsylvania and New York."

Tournament fees must be paid by Aug. 15 and are $135 per golfer and $500 per foursome, and includes luncheon at Barker Tavern. To register and for information on sponsorship opportunities, contact Gerry Leneweaver at 781-544-7704; or email him at gleneweaver@groundround.com.

She has a twinkle in her eye, a smile on her lips and autism.

Rosie's family understands that for Rosie, and the more than one million Americans like her who are living with an autism spectrum disorder, research offers hope. That's why they joined forces with 7,000 other people in Boston last year, to raise money for the National Alliance for Autism Research (NAAR), the first organization in the country dedicated to funding and accelerating biomedical research to unlock the mysteries of autism spectrum disorders. To date, NAAR has committed $14.9 million to directly fund autism research - more than any other non-governmental organization in the U.S. Most of the money raised for NAAR comes from the Walk F.A.R. Painting daydreams

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

In her own words, Hanover artist Valerie Doran Norris paints "from a desire to whisk you away and make you daydream."

To this motive, Norris's choice of subject matter in her landscape watercolors is the stuff that would whisk away more than a few folks into a daydream. Historic and elegant locations from Cape Cod to England, with stops from Scituate to Bermuda to the British Virgin Islands along the way, are highlighted in her work.

Working from photographs, Norris faithfully recreates scenes of islands, beaches, gardens, valleys and rivers with the occasional cathedral or other manmade landmark in her various travels.

The best of the painter's travel-snapshot pieces are on view in her first one-woman show, "Landscapes Near and Far," at Norwell's South Shore Natural Science Center through Aug. 29. Working from photographs, Norris faithfully recreates scenes of islands, beaches, gardens, valleys and rivers with the occasional cathedral or other manmade landmark in her various travels.

"I find these scenes calming and relaxing," said Norris. "I enjoy looking at them when I get to travel to these locations."Norris, 40, moved to Hanover in 1967 from Michigan and has lived there for 36 years. She currently resides there with her husband, two daughters and their dog while working part-time at Genevieve Lane Natural Healing Center in Norwell as a Massage Therapist.

For her arts background, Norris has a B.A. in Fine Arts from Westfield State College, with a minor concentration in Graphic Design. She worked in the Graphic Arts Field for 13 years, including catalogue work for companies like Vermont Castings and Fetco International and freelance illustration work for Offshore Magazine for three years. Local shows where Norris's art work has been shown include The Chase Gallery in Provincetown, The 2nd Parish Church of Hingham Arts Festival, The Silver Ribbon Gallery in

The return of the 'Rock and Roll Hoochie Koo'

Edgar Winter and Rick Derringer make tour stop in Plymouth

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Like many other veteran rockers from the 1960s and 70s, Rick Derringer has never stopped touring and recording, whether on the performing, writing or production end.

But this summer's tour will be a good time to catch the seasoned rock/blues singer/guitarist live, particularly for those fans from the 70s hit-making days of "Rock and Roll Hoochie Koo" who may not have been following his more recent career.

Derringer is essentially wearing two hats on the road these days — one as the old-school blues/rock guitar-slinger, playing the old hits and other like-minded, high-energy jams for some concert dates — the other in the guitarist's newly emerging Smooth Jazz personage in promotion of his recent Smooth Jazz CD. "Rick Derringer Free Ride" has done surprisingly well on the national jazz-based charts. Many gigs have also featured some overlapping of the musical duality.

Some of the old-school rockin' dates have additionally been double-bills with Derringer's old friend and frequent collaborator, singer/multi-instrumentalist Edgar Winter. The two will be sharing the stage once again with a tour stop at Plymouth Memorial Hall this Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

Rick Derringer and Edgar Winter play Plymouth's Memorial Hall Saturday night.

"Our Plymouth show will be mostly classic, guitar-jamming rock, covering pretty much all of that side of my career including my solo albums, different band projects with Edgar (Winter) over the years and so on," said Derringer. "We'll be doing all the old hits between Edgar and myself, like `Hoochie Koo,' `Frankenstein' and others, plus one song from the jazz CD, the title tune, which, yes, that's our new jazz remake of the hit `Free Ride.' But altogether, we're going to hit on stuff from throughout both our careers, with the emphasis on high-energy rock and blues."

Derringer, 54, who was born Rick Zehringer, first tasted the national spotlight at age 16 when his band The McCoys hit #1 with their 1965 frat-rock smash "Hang On Sloopy," then rocked even harder later that year with their Top Ten follow-up, a cover of the Peggy Lee hit "Fever." By the end of the '60s, Derringer was jamming with the Winter brothers, Edgar and singer/guitarist Johnny, and he and the McCoys became the "And" of the high-powered Johnny Winter And blues/rock band projects as well as part of Edgar's White Trash rock/R&B/soul revue.

Even with the McCoys, Derringer had already wielded a distinct and energized guitar style that lived up to the gun-maker connotation of his adopted stage name. In the '70s, he hit the Top Twenty with his own version of "Rock and Roll Hoochie Koo," which he'd previously penned for Johnny Winter, and continued

Julio's back

Seasoned performer has new songs to share on tour

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

These days, it may be Enrique Iglesias who is filling stadiums with his concert appearances.

But proud father Julio Iglesias is giving his heartthrob son a run for his money, with his own concert tour which brings him to the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset on Saturday, Aug. 16, and Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis on Sunday, Aug. 17.

Indeed, the elder Iglesias ranks as one of the most successful international recording artists in pop music history — having recorded 77 albums which have sold a total of more than 250 million copies worldwide. Were it not for a twist of fate, however, Julio Iglesias may have found himself competing with the likes of Pele and David Beckham for fame and adulation instead of Tom Jones and Johnny Mathis.

Born in 1943 in Madrid, Iglesias studied law with hopes of becoming a career diplomat and dreamed of a life in professional soccer. A remarkable athlete, Iglesias even landed his ideal job as a goalkeeper with the professional soccer team, Real Madrid. His dreams, however, were shattered when a near-fatal car accident left him partially paralyzed and unable to walk for almost two years.

Were it not for a twist of fate, however, Julio Iglesias may have found himself competing with the likes of Pele and David Beckham for fame and adulation instead of Tom Jones and Johnny Mathis.

Julio Iglesias performs Saturday, Aug. 16 at the South Shore Music Circus and Sunday, Aug. 17 at the Cape Cod Melody Tent.

During his lengthy hospitalization in Madrid, Iglesias spent time listening to the radio and writing, poems, many of which contained melancholy verses questioning man's mission in life. Strumming away on an old guitar given to him to use as therapy and exercise for his fingers, Iglesias soon added music to his poems and found himself immersed in a new passion.

With his recovery progressing, Julio soon surprised everyone by winning the most prestigious song festival in Spain, the Benidorm, with his own composition, "La Vida Sigue Igual"

Maque Choux

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Maque Choux is a Cajun mixture of corn, bell pepper, onion, celery, tomato, herbs, and spice. It may also contain chicken, shrimp, crawfish, ham, tasso, bacon, or sausage. ("Maque" means corn and "choux" refers to cabbage.) I wanted a one-dish supper, not just a vegetable side dish, so I settled on chicken since it is ubiquitous. What I did not want was an overcooked slurry of a dish, the sort of things where each element loses its personality. I wanted something bright, summery, and fresh.

I started with the corn, using six medium ears, cutting the kernels off the cob and scraping the cobs as well (this added extra flavor). For the chicken, I went with thighs (they are hard to overcook and stay juicy when breast meat turns dry). I found that the dish tasted best if the thighs were well-browned to start and seasoned with salt and pepper.

Many savory Cajun recipes start with bell pepper, celery, onion, and garlic. After testing, I eliminated the garlic (tasted odd with corn) and the celery, the latter not adding much flavor. I used two medium onions which added a nice sweetness to the dish. I also settled on half a pepper each of green and red, a bit of extravagance I admit, but I liked the combination of flavors. (You can use one whole green or red pepper if you like.) Fresh cherry tomatoes added brightness and they do not need to be seeded or skinned, just halved.

In terms of meat, I tested bacon and ham but they did not add much more than a salty taste. Chorizo was a little greasy and I finally settled on Italian sausage, either sweet or hot. (Tasso, a classic Cajun sausage, is great but not available in most supermarkets.) Fresh thyme worked well as did either basil or parsley added at the end of cooking. A pinch of red pepper flakes added a touch of heat and complexity.

Some Maque Choux recipes call for additional liquid (cream, milk, water, or stock) but my recipe did not seem to need it. (The corn and onions release a fair amount of liquid.) The dish takes about 45 minutes to prepare and makes a simple but hearty summer supper.

SUMMER CORN STEW WITH CHICKEN AND SAUSAGE

You can use either one whole green or red pepper if you like. Adjust the heat of this dish by choosing sweet or hot sausage and adding red pepper flakes to taste.

1 tablespoon olive oil
1 pound sweet or hot Italian sausage, cut into 3/4-inch lengths
8 bone-in chicken thighs, skin removed and excess fat trimmed
Salt and pepper
2 medium onions, cut into 1/2-inch dice, about 2 cups
1/2 red bell pepper, cut into 1/2-inch dice, about 3/4 cup
1/2 green bell pepper, cut into 1/2-inch dice, about 3/4 cup
4 to 5 sprigs fresh thyme
Pinch to 1/2 teaspoon red pepper flakes or to taste
6 ears corn, kernels cut from cob and cobs scraped clean, juices reserved
3 cups cherry tomatoes, halved
1/4 cup chopped fresh basil or 2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
Cooked rice for serving

1. Heat a large, heavy-duty sauté pan with a lid or a large Dutch oven over medium-high heat. Add the olive oil and swirl to coat the bottom. Add the sausage pieces and brown well. Remove from pan and set aside. Season chicken thighs liberally with salt and pepper. Brown well on all sides, in batches if necessary. Remove from pan and set aside.

2. Pour off all but 1 tablespoon of fat and lower the heat to medium. Add the onions, bell pepper, thyme, and red pepper flakes. Sauté, stirring frequently until the vegetables have softened but not browned, about 5 to 7 minutes. Add the corn and tomatoes and stir to combine. Bring to a simmer and add back the chicken and sausage pieces, submerging them in the corn mixture as much as possible. Cover and cook, stirring occasionally for about 30 minutes or until the thighs reach 165 degrees (use an instant-read thermometer) and the corn and tomatoes have cooked down to a well-bodied sauce. You may increase the heat and simmer uncovered for 2 to 3 minutes to thicken the sauce if necessary. Stir in the basil or parsley and taste for seasonings, adjusting for salt and pepper as necessary. Serve immediately over rice.

Serves 4 to 6.

to work as both a sideman and producer for both the Winter brothers while spreading his session player and production work to artists such as Alice Cooper, Todd Rundgren and Steely Dan. He further diversified in the '80s, working with Cyndi Lauper, Barbara Streisand, Kiss and others.

Derringer calls his simultaneous and sometimes interacting rock and smooth jazz tours separate entities. His Derringer Free Ride smooth jazz album has been riding the jazz charts since last October and in the Top Twenty on most of them for the last 16 weeks.

"Our Plymouth show will be mostly classic, guitar-jamming rock, covering pretty much all of that side of my career..."
Rick Derringer

"I think my music has grown with my audience, and vice versa, over the years," said Derringer. "The main difference between playing live now and back in the 60s and 70s is the audience is less naive now, they're more into pure musical content than a lot of wild antics onstage. And although a lot of aspects of playing the music are still the same, the audience is still the judge, and you can't cheat them."

Rick Derringer and Edgar Winter play Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street in Plymouth Saturday, Aug. 16 at 7:30 p.m. For tickets and information call 866-408-7619 or visit www.ticketweb.com

Maintaining the August landscape

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As dusk approached on a misty summer evening, I paused by the side of my little fishpond to enjoy the peaceful, soothing sounds of the gurgling fountain. To my delight, I was greeted by the friendly croaking of a new speckled green frog floating among the lily pads. Recent invasions by unknown intruders have reduced my goldfish population and a longtime resident frog has been among the missing for nearly a month. Raccoons, hawks, blue herons, a handsome white egret and a variety of felines including my own, have been seen lurking around the pool in recent weeks, any of whom might be guilty of pilfering its inhabitants. Fortunately, our continuing moist conditions have been ideal for amphibian relocations and to my surprise, my plump, oversized frog has returned, apparently inviting several friends to accompany him to his domain. Two tiny frogs sat perched on lily pads in addition to his singing comrade. As filtered moonlight shimmered through a veil of passing clouds, I reluctantly retreated from the garden, comforted by the discovery of these newest additions to my garden menagerie.

Every growing season has its joys and disappointments. Twenty-five years of dirt digging have taught me to expect and accept yearly extremes; too cold, too hot, too wet, or too dry and rarely, if ever, the ideal growing conditions in any given season for all those delectable plants we passionate gardeners endeavor to cultivate. Many plants entered the fall and winter months severely stressed and weakened by drought. Early and persistent snowcover, desiccating winds and prolonged dampness during the spring resulted in innumerable losses of marginally hardy plants and even established stalwart specimens that were unable to withstand the combination of weather extremes Mother Nature offered over the past year.

While it would be impossible to anticipate all the environmental fluctuations from year to year and equally difficult to prepare our landscapes to cope with these variations, this summer's prolonged dampness has provided valuable insight into adjustments that might be helpful in future growing seasons. The importance of good drainage has become increasingly obvious as torrential downpours have continuously flooded many lawns and gardens, drowning our perennials and rotting vegetables and annuals. Make note of low spots and areas of poor drainage throughout your landscape and consider filling these in later this season or create mounded or raised bed gardens to ensure drainage. In extreme cases, regrading the terrain may be necessary to redirect runoff.

Compacted soils or those that are high in clay content should be lightened with organic amendments in the weeks to come. Heavy, clay soils are dense due to tiny clay particles that cling together and drain slowly, which may prevent critical air molecules from reaching plant roots. This often leads to rot during periods of dampness or during the winter months when plants are not actively growing and thereby unable to diffuse excess moisture through their leaves. The addition of organic matter to clay soils improves drainage and airflow and allows the soil to warm up more rapidly in spring.

Organic additives are equally valuable for sandy soils, which contain large particles that drain rapidly. Although plants grown in sandy soils have probably fared better this season, these porous soils tend to demand constant irrigation during dry spells and plants usually suffer during years of drought. In addition, nutrients are quickly swept away each time plants are watered and this year's torrential downpours have surely depleted the mineral content of every soil type. The presence of organic matter or humus provides beneficial microorganisms that convert nutrients in the organic matter to inorganic nutrients that our plants can use. Even soils that are properly prepared when plantings are initially introduced require regular replenishment of these organic materials. Compost, well-decomposed manure, peat moss, or shredded leaves can be worked into the soil or applied as a top dressing in the fall.

Equally evident during this wet growing season are those plants that flourish given copious quantities of moisture. Although both daylilies and hostas are extremely drought-tolerant, meaning that they will survive and multiply in the driest years, they thrive given bountiful moisture and have never been so luxuriant. Unfortunately, with perpetual dampness comes the propensity for slug and snail infestations and these slimy pests are enjoying a banner season. Many of my prized hosta specimens have become riddled with holes as these voracious creatures devour everything in sight. Although slugs and snails usually creep along under the cover of darkness, the moist conditions and continuous cloud cover have prompted nearly a constant feeding frenzy. It should be noted that many of the effective products on the market are toxic to pets and wildlife. Shallow saucers of beer, diatomaceous earth, crushed eggshells, coarse sand, and wood ashes are just a few of the commonly recommended alternatives to chemicals. Slug baits, including Escargo and Sluggo, that contain iron phosphate, which naturally exists in our soils, appear to be fairly safe and helpful in reducing mollusk populations. Even wooden shingles strategically placed around the gardens can be used to attract the creatures. During the day, slugs will congregate beneath the shingles and periodic collections with a trowel will yield vast numbers that can be eliminated.

Sunshine and drier conditions are in our forecast for the coming week. There are weeds to pull, flopping plants to stake, grass to mow and perhaps a few moments to enjoy my singing frogs and the lavish blooms of this tropical-growing season.

Painting daydreams

Pembroke, The Duxbury Art Association's Winter Juried Show and the South Shore Art Center Art Festival, Cohasset. Norris's watercolors favor a personal style of tight, well-defined lines and pastel-like colors.

Titles and subject locations of her pieces are mostly self-descriptive, including several series items such as the five-part "Woodford Valley, Wiltshire," the three-part "Virgin Gorda" and the two-part "Menauhunt," plus single pieces like "Scituate Light," "Kensington Garden, London," "South Cape Beach," "Stonehenge" and "River Avon with Salisbury Cathedral" among others. For Norris, the show at the SSNSC is "the most intense amount of painting I've done since college. Up to last fall I was probably doing maybe one or two paintings a year."

"My mother tells me that since I was three I was telling people I was going to be an artist when I grew up," Norris said. "I think having people around you that can recognize your talents and nurture those talent is always good. And to have great teachers at an early age makes a big difference. I remember both my art teachers from elementary school and my high school art teacher being very supportive and nurturing. I remember one of my college professors used to tell us 'To draw, is to draw, is to draw.' And I think, what he was trying to get into our heads is that if you want to succeed or be good at something, you have to do it."

Valerie Doran Norris' exhibit "Lanscapes Near and Far" is on display through Aug. 29 at the South Shore Natural Science Center's Vine Hall Gallery. The Science Center is located on Jacobs Lane in Norwell. For hours and information call (781) 659-2559.

(Life Goes On) in 1968. With that festival appearance, Iglesias embarked on a performing career that has been flourishing ever since. Thanks to his own prolific songwriting, the Spanish superstar won't lack for material at either of his local appearances. In 1983, Iglesias received the first and only Diamond Record Award ever given to a performer by the Guinness Book of World Records, for selling more records in more languages than any other musical artist in history.

After an almost 20 year hiatus from composing, Iglesias collaborated with the respected young record producer, Estefano, on his latest recording. Entitled "Noche de Cuatro Lunes,", the album contains 15 tracks — 10 of which Iglesias co-wrote with Estefano. Additional songs on the album were produced by Ruben Blades, Alejandro Sanz, and Robi Rosa, composer of several of Ricky Martin's hit singles including "Livin' La Vida Loca.". *(Julio Iglesias will appear in concert at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset on Saturday, August 16 and at the Cape Cod Melody Tent on Sunday, Aug. 17. Astral week

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13

You can get a lot accomplished this morning, if you make up a list of things to do and stick to it. It is okay to initiate new activities until 12:19 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. Projects that require your imagination and creativity are highlighted.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 14

The Pisces moon forms challenging contacts to Pluto at 4:01 a.m. and Mercury at 6:29 a.m., when it becomes inactive. After that no major planetary activity occurs, and the inactive moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac. That means that this day is prime for vacationing, relaxing, veging out, recharging your batteries.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 15

Planetary action turns around completely at 4:00 a.m., when the moon enters energetic Aries. Follow through on commitments you have made or jobs that are tedious and labor intensive. You can get them out of the way today. Sports and physical activities get the green light. A lunar alignment to Saturn may generate delays, reversals this evening. Keep it light and go with the flow.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 16

The green light is on for new beginnings across the board. Pull out all the stops. You can cut through obstacles and break new ground at home or work. The Aries moon forms easy contacts to Venus and the sun, making this evening prime for socializing, partying.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 17

Fair and sunny astrological weather prevails today. The Aries moon forms a harmonious contact to Jupiter at 10:36 a.m., when it becomes inactive. A Taurus moon takes over at 2:52 p.m., and forms a flowing 60-degree contact to Uranus at 5:05 p.m. Social and romantic activities are highlighted. Kick back, enjoy favorite pastimes and friends.

MONDAY, AUGUST 18

This is a wonderful day for vacationing. The moon continues its travel in Taurus, and Venus, the planetary ruler of Taurus, aligns with the sun. If you are working, projects should come together easily. Be sure to launch important enterprises before 9:40 a.m., when the moon interacts with Saturn. A lunar alignment to Neptune brings a lull period between 11:54 a.m.-2:54 p.m. Enjoy a leisurely lunch with friends or colleagues.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 19

The moon continues its travel in Taurus, setting a relaxed pace. Planetary influences continue to rate high for work or pleasure. The green light for new starts remains on. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:48 p.m. This moon is decreasing in light, and a new moon will culminate next Wednesday, August 27. Lunar alignments to Venus and Jupiter make this evening prime for romance.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20

The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 12:29 a.m. until 3:41 a.m., when it enters Gemini. The Gemini moon forms challenging 90-degree contacts to Uranus in the morning and Mars in the evening. It may be difficult to get a lot accomplished today. If you are working, handle a variety of projects, tie up loose ends. Stay alert and use common sense. On the other hand, influences rate high for socializing and vacationing. Be sure to take extra time out for fun and games.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 21

Venus and Jupiter conjoin at 6:23 a.m., and the sun prepares to align with Jupiter, generating an upbeat, social mood. The moon continues to travel in loquacious Gemini. However, there is one pitfall in today's planetary picture, in effect between 12:29-3:29 p.m., when the moon and Pluto oppose. Choose your words carefully. Careless or indiscreet remarks may come back to haunt you. Fortunately, this influence passes over quickly and the remainder of the day rates high for relaxing and enjoying life.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 22

Yesterday's planetary influences affect this morning as well. The alignment of the sun and Jupiter culminates at 6:08 a.m., and the moon continues active travel in Gemini until 2:15 p.m. Go with your adventurous side; be more spontaneous. If you are working, you can make progress developing projects that need support or input from others. Venus enters Virgo at 7:36 a.m., remaining there until September 15. The moon enters Cancer at 3:44 p.m. and aligns with Venus and Uranus. In addition, a polarity of Venus and Uranus may spark romantic passions this evening.

EMPOWERING INFORMATION

According to numerous focus groups, an average of 57% of consumers indicate that product longevity has the greatest influence on their decisions to purchase hearing instrument batteries. Battery reliability is also critical. Consumers do not want the inconvenience that comes with not knowing when their batteries will wear out. They want to be able to count on a consistent number of days' use. To these ends, the zinc-air battery has become the power system of choice, replacing the far less efficient mercuric oxide and silver oxide batteries of years past. Zinc-air batteries have the highest capacity-to-volume ratio for miniature batteries and a relatively flat discharge curve. They are activated by removing the adhesive covering from the air access hole.

Technology today is constantly on the move toward innovative products and ideas to bring the sounds of life to the hearing impaired. The batteries on the market today for hearing instruments are a perfect example of this. If you think your hearing is not what it should be, come to FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER and see the many marvels now available in the hearing industry. And while you're here at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, why not have a free hearing evaluation? PH: 781-337-1144. We offer FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased here or at our office in Abington.

P.S. Hearing instrument batteries should be stored at room temperature and carried separately from such metal objects as keys and coins.

Cedarmere's affordable component takes center stage

Units segregated from market-rate condominiums

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While the Planning Board continues to give the proposed 105-unit Cedarmere project off Beechwood Street and Rte. 3A high marks – some questions about the development's affordable units have surfaced.

"I just want to say I think the developers have done a great job," said Wayne Sawchuk, 432 Beechwood St., to which Dave Calhoun, one of the principals of the development corporation, King Taylor Cohasset LLC, clapped his hands and said, "Thank you, Wayne."

But at last week's Planning Board meeting, during which abutters peppered the developers with worries about traffic, drainage and other impacts — Sawchuk said he was concerned about the affordable portion of the proposal.

"This is not a second-rate project and this is not a 40B project."
— David Calhoun, Cedarmere

"It seems you're creating something separate from everything," he said, adding that he preferred to see more affordable housing scattered throughout the development.

Plans for Cedarmere, which would be restricted to those 55-and-older, include a total of 74 market-rate condominiums, which are expected to start at $650,000. Fourteen of those are slated for the new "grand manor house" that would also include common areas; 56 would be either single or two-family residences in courtyard settings, and an existing barn at the site will be renovated into a single-family residence.

Twenty-nine affordable units would be in a separate building nearer Rte. 3A. It's not clear if the affordable units would be rentals or condominiums. An existing cabin near the western end of the site would be renovated to house two additional affordable units.

"This is not a second-rate project and this is not a 40B project," Calhoun said, adding the design of the affordable housing ties in with the design of the

ZBA ruling may spell relief for 3 Jerusalem Lane home

But homeowner still disillusioned

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Phil Ayer, who built 3 Jerusalem Lane, was subdued when the Zoning Board of Appeals appeared to reach a consensus this week that his new house could qualify for a special permit after all.

After tackling other matters on its packed agenda, the board deliberated for upwards of an hour Monday night on what will likely go down as a precedent-setting decision for Cohasset.

Although sitting members Woody Chittick, Ben Lacy and Anson Wheeller won't vote on the final draft of the decision until this Monday at the earliest – they were not able to determine the house is "substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood" — the standard in the bylaw used to deny relief. To be substantially more detrimental, the enlargement of Ayers' house, which about triples the prior home at the site, would have to be "injurious or dangerous to the public health or hazardous because of traffic congestion or other reason."

"I think if anyone thinks about it, how would they feel? How would they feel if someone was trying to take their home away?"
— Phil Ayer, homeowner

"Obstruction of views doesn't matter and that's not even on the table," ZBA Chairman Chittick said. The Ayers' home sits on a promontory with spectacular ocean views and the size of the home has affected the views of some of the abutters.

Stormy forecast is predicted

Could be an 'above-average' year for hurricanes

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Bob. Gloria. Donna. Carol. Remember them? They're not your next-door neighbors, they're names of memorable hurricanes that swept through New England over the years. And according to weather experts, we could be adding to that list of names this year.

According to emergency operations managers in different South Shore towns, it's going to be an active season for hurricanes.

Predictions are saying it's going to be an above-average year for hurricanes," said Mark Duff, emergency management director for Hingham. "And it's never too early to prepare,"

"The National Weather Service have said there looks like there's greater-than-average activity this hurricane season," said Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency (MEMA) spokesperson Peter Judge.

"Those are dirty words in this town," said Arthur Lehr, emergency management director for Cohasset.

Officials say preparation is the name of the game when it comes to hurricanes. Recently, MEMA sponsored Hurricane Awareness Week, from July 20-26. During that time, local officials had the opportunity to attend a workshop sponsored by the state to prepare for hurricane season, as well as take part in a two-day exercise where communications systems were tested.

While the state does take the brunt of responsibility when it comes to bringing hurricane awareness to individual com-

From the sands of Iraq to Cohasset's Sandy Beach

Police officer is back on local beat

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.CO

The heat and humidity of a New England summer can seem unbearable at times, but for Brian Peebles the conditions are a more than welcome change.

For the past five months, the Cohasset special summer police officer was on active duty in Nasiriyah, as a hospital corpsman in the US Naval Reserve. Nasiriyah is outside Al Basra in southeastern Iraq.

This summer is Peebles' second summer in Cohasset. He also works full-time as a firefighter and first responder for Weymouth. He has been in the reserves for 15 years as a member of F Company 2nd Battalion 25th Marine Regiment. This was his second trip to the Middle East; he was also deployed for Desert Storm in 1991.

"There were certain times when I was scared," Peebles said about his recent mission, adding with the absence of local police, there was a lot of chaos in the city when his company arrived. Iraqi troops had abandoned their weapons everywhere, with grenades and various weapons easily accessible.

"Everyone had an AK- 47," he said.

One of Peebles' jobs was to patrol the streets of Nasiriyah, a huge change from his patrol duties in Cohasset. While most Iraqis gave the American soldiers no trouble, he said a handful would sometimes throw rocks at them and occasionally

Water Commission seeks $20M loan

The Water Commission has applied for a $20 million low interest loan from the state to continue its water systems improvement program.

"If we are successful in getting this 2 percent low-interest loan from the state," said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb, "we could save $6 million in reduced interest payments over the next 20 years, which would allow us to continue our aggressive system improvements program with the least impact to our ratepayers."

The low-interest loans sought by the Water Commission are offered by the state Department of Environmental Protection Drinking Water State Revolving Fund (SRF) program on a competitive basis each year.

"This funding would be used to replace about 9.5 miles of old and undersized water mains in our distribution system, which will continue our program of improving fire protection and water service throughout Cohasset," McNabb said.

"This project would also include the installation of 90 new fire hydrants, the replacement of about 35 lead water service lines, the looping of dead ends to improve low flows and pressure, and the installation of pumps to improve water pressure in existing low pressure areas," he said.

The application also includes improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, including replacement of the filter media, replacing the flow and pressure transmitters, replacing the rapid mix motors, drive shafts and motors, installation of adjustable frequency drives for the raw water pumps, and replacing the generator automatic transfer switch.

No one is hurt in lobster boat mishap

A Cohasset lobster boat hit the rocks off Strawberry Point at 11:20 a.m. Tuesday morning and began taking on water. According to Coast Guard spokeswoman Lauren Smith, the 38-foot "Margie," owned by Cohasset lobsterman Bob Figueiredo, began taking on water after the mishap. The harbormaster was notified and called Point Allerton Coast Guard station, which dispatched three rescue boats to the scene. As the Coast Guard looked on, other lobster boats in the area helped tow "Margie" to shallow waters where the boat could be repaired at low tide. Figueiredo and his granddaughter were the only two on board and were not injured, Smith said.

Hearing starts at 7:30 p.m., Aug. 25

The Water Commissioners have again requested the Zoning Board of Appeals to deny the comprehensive permit application submitted by Avalon Bay for a 200-plus unit housing development in Cohasset.

"Avalon's new wastewater disposal plan, to dispose of 40,000 gallons per day in a subsurface disposal facility on Scituate Hill, does not work," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "Earlier this year we showed that their surface water discharge plan for wastewater was illegal and would not protect Lily Pond. Well, their new plan also fails."

"At the ZBA's meeting on Aug. 25, the Water Commission will yet again ask them to deny the Avalon Bay permit application," said McNabb. "Based on the expert opinion of our wastewater engineer, AvalonBay cannot demonstrate that their subsurface discharge plan will work or that it will not contaminate the watershed for Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply."

"AvalonBay proposes to dispose of 40,000 gallons per day of treated wastewater in the Lily Pond watershed, even though the most recent percolation tests taken in the last year were not witnessed by the Board of Health and the ones that were witnessed were taken in 1983, 20 years ago," said McNabb.

"Besides, as anyone living in Cohasset knows, the soils in that area are poor, there is lots of ledge, and there are high levels of groundwater – such that any wastewater discharged underground in Scituate Hill is likely to soon bubble to the surface," said McNabb. "Simply put, AvalonBay has not proven that the area is suitable for the proposed wastewater disposal, and it is doubtful that anyone could ever prove that this area is suitable."

"The ZBA should deny this application outright so AvalonBay can go back to the drawing board and see if they can come up with a wastewater disposal plan that will work," said McNabb.

This is a press release from the Water Commission.

Water quality issues addressed

Complaints are responded to

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Water Commission is looking into complaints voiced by some residents of the Beechwood Street area near the proposed Cedarmere project regarding water quality. At a Planning Board meeting two weeks ago, residents said they were experiencing very poor water quality as well as water pressure problems.

At the subsequent meeting, Planning Board member Peter Pratt said he had spoken with his cousin, Glenn Pratt, who sits on the Water Commission, and would provide him with names and addresses of everyone experiencing problems.

"We're responsible for the water main from their property line to the street."
— Glenn Pratt, Water Commission

Glenn Pratt said each home on the list was visited to determine the cause of the problem and in most cases there was a problem on the homeowner's end.

"We're responsible for the water main from their property line to the street," Glenn Pratt said. After inspection, the pipes on the town's end are in good working order, he said.

The Beechwood area that is in question is on the town's to-do list for pipe replacement, but that could be as many as five years out because older pipes in town have a greater priority. Glenn Pratt said most of the pipes inspected in the area were installed in the last 40 years ago by the town and are in fine working order, where most of the pipes to the homes are much older than that.

language in the bylaw that "gives the board anything to hang its hat on" in terms of the house – which meets setback and height requirements – qualifying as substantially more detrimental.

The board also dismissed the neighbors' argument that the home reduced their property values, citing conflicting reports from a Realtor and an appraiser.

What being issued a special permit at this stage means is Ayer won't have to tear his house down, although it's unlikely he would have agreed to that without a court fight.

But for Ayer, who was accompanied by his lawyer Roberta Sawyer, it may be a Pyrrhic victory. Months of anguish, a court case and thousands of dollars in legal fees have dampened his enthusiasm for the town.

"I think if anyone thinks about it, how would they feel?" he asked. "How would they feel if someone was trying to take their home away?

"We feel we've been singled out and this has caused a lot of anguish and cost a great deal of money," Ayer said. "It is very disillusioning for someone who loved the town."

Mark DeGiacomo, an attorney for some of the neighbors, was also very low key after the deliberations. DeGiacomo still holds out hope the board will deny the special permit.

"The decision is next week," he said. "Hopefully the board will think about it and decide the house is substantially more detrimental."

Sawyer, Ayer's attorney, didn't mince words. The Ayers are in court fighting the ZBA decision that determined they needed a special permit.

"It's not a question of whether it's a victory or not," she said. "It's a matter of applying the law and the board did not properly apply the law."

The Ayers were told last January to stop work on the home – nearly 80 percent complete at that point – after the ZBA upheld the neighbors' appeal of the building inspector's issuance of a building permit. The board said the house needed a special permit because it is on an undersized lot and was larger than the preexisting home at the site. The neighbors had fought to stop construction since August of last year, but Building Inspector Bob Egan stuck to what he thought was a widely held, long-standing interpretation of the bylaw that replacing a smaller home with a larger one on a non-conforming lot was OK as long as the new home met all dimensional requirements.

Oversized homes on undersized lots are not uncommon in town. Ayer's lawyer found half a dozen building permits for new homes on nonconforming lots that were issued over the past several years that weren't required to obtain special permits. However, the ZBA said the Ayers did not have standing to appeal those special permits because they didn't have a direct impact on 3 Jerusalem Lane.

Chittick said if the ZBA decides to grant the special permit it may condition that on Ayer removing a roof deck and staircase to the roof. The board feels the roof deck where people can look down on the neighbors may impact privacy which could be an "issue of detrimentality." The ZBA did not think the staircase and deck were materially more detrimental, however.

The board hopes to vote on its decision at 7 p.m. Monday, before the continuation of the hearing at 7:30 p.m. with AvalonBay, the proposed 200-unit apartment complex off Rte. 3A.

Harley raffle will help honor soldiers killed in Vietnam

The Massachusetts Vietnam Veterans Memorial Committee, a registered non-profit organization, announces it is currently selling raffle tickets for a new 100th Anniversary Harley Davidson 2003 FLSTFI Fat Boy. The tickets are $100 each and only 350 will be sold.

The drawing for the motorcycle is scheduled to take place on Saturday, Sept. 27 at 2 p.m. at the Memorial at Green Hill Park in Worcester.

"The Massachusetts Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Worcester is a beautiful, fitting tribute to the fallen Massachusetts soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines of the Vietnam War," said Cohasset resident and Vietnam veteran Timothy Sullivan. "The funds we receive through efforts such as this raffle help us to maintain the site and keep it open to the general public as a place to reflect on the war and remember those that gave their lives in service to their country,"

The motorcycle was provided by Paramount Harley-Davidson of Framingham

The Committee will use all proceeds from the raffle for the perpetual care and upkeep of the official state memorial for Massachusetts Vietnam Veterans who were killed in action. Tucked away in a serene, the Massachusetts Vietnam Veterans Memorial occupies four-acre section of Green Hill Park in Worcester. The $1.4 million memorial offers visitors a quiet place to sit by a duck pond or stroll on landscaped or wooded paths.

The memorial is comprised of three "places" — the Place of Flags, the Place of Words and the Place of Names. Etched into the blocks at the Place of Names is an alphabetical listing of the 1,536 Massachusetts dead and missing servicemen and one woman in Southeast Asia. Etched into the blocks at the Place of Words are excerpts from letters sent home to loved ones by some of those Massachusetts servicemen.

For more information or to purchase a ticket, please call Paul Flynn of the Stoughton Veteran Services Department at 781-341-1300 ext. 220 or mail a $100 check (no cash) to Massachusetts Viet Nam Veterans Memorial - PMB 160, 971 Central Street Stoughton, MA 02072. Please include a return address and telephone number.

fire shots.

Peebles said it is a common occurrence to hear shots fired in celebration in Iraq. The locals would shoot their guns off at weddings, or even to celebrate the electricity coming back on, so he and others patrolling the streets were constantly looking over their shoulders to make sure the shots weren't being fired at them.

"If you don't have bits of concrete hitting your face, you're probably OK," he said.

"It's an indescribable heat. I thought I knew what hot was."

— Brian Peebles

Brian Peebles at the city center of Nasiriyah, Iraq – which is along way from Sandy Beach.

Because he is a hospital corpsman, Peebles took care of the sick and wounded. He treated some Iraqis that had been shot or stabbed, as well as some with diseases, but mainly treated American Marines who were very sick from the water. Nasiriyah had no running water or electricity when the troops arrived, and Peebles said once water did begin to flow again, it wasn't fit for drinking. However, because of the unbearable heat, it is necessary to drink water constantly.

"It's an indescribable heat," he said. "I thought I knew what hot was."

Even having spent time in the desert before, Peebles said conditions seemed worse this time around as far as the heat is concerned. The heat was so intense, that while riding in the back of a pickup truck in the desert, the wind felt like the heat of a hair dryer, he said. There were also two men in his unit, who had clipped thermometers typically used by hikers and skiers, to their uniforms. The maximum temperature the thermometers could register was 120 degrees, so they exploded in the heat.

When the troops arrived, there was no designated area for them to set up camp and Peebles said they were basically living in dirt holes in the ground. As their mission progressed, he said they were able to move into an abandoned building so they would at least have walls and a roof over their heads. Toward the end of his stay, his unit spent time in Kuwait, where he said the conditions were much better and included barracks with some air conditioning.

But there was no electricity in the desert of Iraq, and air conditioning was a far off dream during most of his stay. Not only was there no way for soldiers to keep cool, there was no way to keep their food or drinks cold either. Peebles said after leaving a bottle of water out in the sun, he went back to have a drink only to burn his mouth like he would have on a hot cup of coffee.

The weather did have one positive aspect — the soldiers were able to use the heat of the sun to cook their food. Peebles said many soldiers would have care packages sent to them with Ramen noodle packets inside. By adding water and leaving the bowl out in the sun, the noodles were cooked and ready to eat in a matter of minutes.

Even with the harsh conditions, Peebles said by the time he left, it was apparent that real progress had been made as far as retaining order and cleaning up the city.

"It's not perfect, but I'm sure even our harshest critics would say that about Nasiriyah," he said.

He also said the conditions aren't discouraging the soldiers, whose spirits remain high.

"We knew we had something to do," said Peebles, who believes all soldiers take their job seriously and will stay as long as they need to get the job done.

While Peebles doesn't know what the future holds militarily speaking, for now he's just happy to be back at home with his wife, Jennifer, and his four-year-old son, Billy. There is always the possibility that he will be called to duty again and said, "I hope not, but if they need us, we'll go."

entire project and is meant to fit in with the landscape just as much as any other design feature.

Cedarmere is the first project proposed under the town's Senior Overlay District, adopted at Town Meeting last fall to encourage more housing for senior citizens. Under the bylaw, the project, which is planned for the 41-acre former Hayes Estate off Beechwood Street could have as many as 330 units. Cedarmere will also offer 30 percent affordable units, which is more than the 25 percent required by the bylaw. But after seeking input from town boards, the Cedarmere development team decided to keep the density down, Calhoun said.

Under 40B, the state affordable housing law, Cohasset is vulnerable to the comprehensive permit process because the town has so little housing deemed affordable by state standards. Comprehensive permits allow developers to build higher density than the town bylaws allow. But 40B requires affordable housing to be "invisible" within a development, meaning affordable units look the same as the market-rate ones. AvalonBay, which is proposing 200 apartments on 62 acres off Rte. 3A, is a 40B project.

The affordable component of Cedarmere would have to qualify as a state Local Initiative Project for the affordable units to "count" in the town's affordable housing inventory. It is not clear under the LIP program if the Cedarmere affordable units will "count" since, as proposed, they are separate and different from the market-rate ones. Cohasset has less than 3 percent of its total housing stock deemed affordable by state standards and needs 10 percent to no longer be vulnerable to 40B projects.

In a telephone interview, Phil Hailer, spokesman for the Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) said he could only speak hypothetically because the DHCD does not have the Cedarmere application before it.

"If there were a large disparity between the market-rate and affordable units in all likelihood, we would turn the plan down," Hailer said. "Under LIP we insist the affordable units be comparable in size and amenities to the market-rate units."

Under state guidelines, the affordable apartments could rent for as much as $1300 a month; and affordable condos could sell for as much as $170,000.

At last week's meeting, Planning Board member Peter Pratt said the state will have the final signoff on the integration of all units.

Nevertheless, the Planning Board is enthusiastic about the entire project and likes the way the affordable component is being handled.

Board member Bill Good said that he thinks the affordable housing is a "first class" building. "I say bravo," he said.

"We want this to be a showplace when it's done," Calhoun said.

Members of the Cedarmere team that includes principals David and Kelli Calhoun of Cohasset and Tom Ragno of Lexington, architect Jim Sandell and engineer Neil Murphy, both of Cohasset, said the Senior Overlay District passed muster at Town Meeting as a way to keep people in Cohasset that might have otherwise had to move somewhere else.

But at least one abutter thinks Cedarmere is too expensive to achieve that goal.

"What fraction of those people could afford to live there?" said Catherine Baker, 30 Hammond Ave. "They're not for us, you've built this for wealthy people."

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said the quality of the project should be good news for the neighborhood.

"The applicant is building some very high quality housing," he said. "The people who are going to buy them are going to demand quality, and that bodes well for abutters."

The Planning Board approved Cedarmere's preliminary plans conditioned on approval from other boards, such as the sewer and conservation commissions.

Overall, the plans seem to fit the expectations of the members of the Planning Board.

"The quality of the presentation and the attention to detail and effort made to date for a preliminary proposal has been extraordinary. I really feel good about the proposal," Good said.

"All tolled, I think we have a real superlative project in front of us," Pratt said.

Cedarmere will be back before the Planning Board on Sept. 24.

Sewering Cedarmere won't be a waste, developers say

But Commission skeptical about available capacity

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The proposed Cedarmere development on the former Hayes estate may have hit a bump in the road over its plans to hookup to the town's sewer system.

Although the Sewer Commission hasn't shut the door on the 105-unit condominium complex gaining sewer access – it's a long way from a done deal, commissioners say.

At the crux of what might best be described as a misunderstanding, David Calhoun one of the principals with King Taylor Cohasset LLC, developers for the project, held up a draft of the Housing Section of the Cohasset Master Plan at Monday's Sewer Commission meeting.

With the document in hand, Calhoun read aloud from a passage about the town working with developers to help create affordable housing for seniors. It states a project like his would be given permission to tie in because it fits the objectives of what the town wants.

"The Sewer Commission has agreed to provide sewer capacity to the Senior Housing Committee project and would have to extend capacity to the other projects as well if they were to be approved," he read.

But Sewer Commission Chairman Ray Kasperowicz pointed out the Master Plan is still in draft form and is not a binding document.

Selectman Tom Callahan, who also sits on the Growth and Development Committee that has been working on the Master Plan, thinks the draft should not have been brought into the discussion at all. He said the final draft should be ready this fall before Town Meeting, to allow time for articles to be included on the warrant. The overall plan would serve as a roadmap for the town.

"There's a lot of wiggle room on these numbers."
— Ray Kasperowicz, Sewer Commission

Cedarmere developers are under pressure to get a sewer hookup finalized because the Planning Board's approval of the project – voted last week – was conditional on approval of other boards like the Sewer Commission. If allowed to tie in, they will be responsible for laying the pipes up Rte. 3A to the development, which will then provide neighbors access to tie in as well.

"We're looking to tie in people on Hammond Avenue. It's not just Cedarmere that will benefit from it," Calhoun said.

Cedarmere developers assured the commission statistics compiled by their consultants prove there is sufficient capacity for the project. Cedarmere would generate 150 gallons per day per unit for a total of 15,700 gallons, they said, adding the plant has a design capacity for 300,000 gallons and is only using two-thirds of that. Also, once the plant is upgraded, there would be sufficient capacity to hook up the Little Harbor area, Atlantic Avenue, Jerusalem Road and Jerusalem Road Extension, as well as Old Coach Road.

But Kasperowicz wasn't so sure.

"There's a lot of wiggle room on these numbers," he said, adding that he would feel much more comfortable approving a development after the planned areas of town had been hooked up for a year or two and data had been collected. "If this were two years out, I'd have a different opinion. I can't feel rushed to answer future unknowns," he said.

Calhoun also said the project will bring an estimated additional tax revenue of roughly $600,000 to the town, which could be used to help areas such as Little Harbor tie in.

"Without a project like ours, they're going to be delayed because you don't have the resources to do it," he said.

But Nichols Road resident Lisa Lojacono of CEES (Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions) that is working toward getting the Little Harbor area tied in, worries the Cedarmere project would push that project back.

"Unless your project is going to dig the holes and lay the pipes, how will your project help us?" she asked.

Cedarmere is also outside the Central Sewer District. Town Meeting approval could be needed to expand the district. In the past, a few homes outside the district that proved there was no other alternative because the land cannot support an on-site system, have been granted tie-in privileges on an emergency basis.

"I don't like to mislead people, this may require a Town Meeting vote," Kasperowicz said.

Calhoun stressed the sooner his project comes on line, the sooner the town can begin to achieve the goals of the Master Plan. That way, when 40B developers come knocking, "we can tell them thank you Avalon, but you can come back later," he said. "If we can do this, we can fight the 40B players." Cedarmere would set aside 30 units for affordable housing (see related story).

But Gary Vanderweil, who serves as an associate member for the Sewer Commission, wonders if allowing the Cedarmere group access to the sewer is legally feasible at all.

"I don't see how we can put this ahead of Avalon," he said.

Because Avalon was told two years ago there wasn't enough capacity to tie in to the sewer, they were "sent away to find alternate solutions," Vanderweil said. He suggested the commission speak to town counsel regarding what could happen if Cedarmere were granted the hookup when Avalon was not.

Calhoun pointed out that the situations are not the same because of the difference in size of the projects.

"The capacity we're looking for is a drop in the bucket compared to other projects," he said.

Cedarmere agreed to submit its proposal to the Sewer Commission in writing.

Abutters hope Cedarmere complex is a good neighbor

Concerned about traffic, other issues

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The 105-unit, high-end Cedarmere senior housing project isn't winning any popularity contests with abutters, who packed last week's Planning Board meeting for the second week in a row to air their concerns about traffic, drainage and other possible impacts.

Traffic consultants tried to allay abutters' concerns over the impact a new development could have on congestion, especially near the development's access points. The proposed development would have two driveways, one off the quiet section of Beechwood Street that runs nearly parallel to Norman Todd Road, and the other on Rte. 3A near Mendel Road.

Tim Wagner of Fay Spofford and Thorndike presented data regarding traffic patterns and safety, collected from various intersections surrounding the property, including the proposed driveways and the traffic light at Beechwood Street and Rte. 3A.

Using figures from the Mass Highway Department, an average, mid-week traffic calculation was figured which would provide statistics comparable for any average day of the year. Calculations from the Avalon developers were also considered because they estimate virtually all vehicles that leave Avalon and head south will travel past the 3A access. [Avalon's driveway would be across from Atlantic Bagel].

"We've accounted for more than enough trips than these units are going to generate," Wagner said.

But Jim Watts, 670 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, said because the traffic study was done in July, he doesn't agree with the findings. In the fall, Watts said he waits at the end of his driveway for a significant amount of time just to get out in the morning.

Wagner said that in his opinion, this study shows the worst-case scenarios for the proposed site, including school traffic, winter weather conditions, and any other likely event that would have an effect on traffic.

Laurie Hegarty, 143 Beechwood St., asked if the study takes into consideration that the police as well as ambulance and fire trucks often use the road.

Neighbors also said people drive too fast up and down Beechwood, and with the added volume of cars, it could pose a safety issue.

John Flores 133 Beechwood St., asked if any kind of growth on the border of Cohasset and Scituate has been considered because a new racquet club is slated to be built.

"The numbers are based on expected land changes from 2003 to 2008. They have everything factored in — not specifically the racquet club, but those types of things are included in the study," Wagner said.

Drainage issues

Cedarmere engineer Neil Murphy tried to tackle drainage concerns in his presentation.

"Our job is to collect drainage and make sure conditions stay the way they are," Murphy said.

But neighbors are worried about what could happen should something go wrong in the future after the developers have sold all the housing units.

"On every plan this board approves, drainage plays a pivotal role," Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said.

Murphy estimated a complete drainage study will be ready for the board sometime next week.

Landscaping, lighting

Architect Jim Sandell said because of the relatively low density of the project, a lot of open space is being preserved. He said "beautiful tree specimens" on the site will be a feature of the plan.

Sandell said there will be a minimum 50-foot boundary in all areas where there are abutters.

David Calhoun, one of the developers, said any wires for lighting would be underground.

Laurie Hegarty said she was concerned about the additional light from street lights and headlights, and suggested adding hedges to help block the glow when the leaves have fallen off the trees in the winter.

BUSINESS NOTES

UPS Store to host grand its opening

On Aug. 23, the UPS Store, 759 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy. in Cohasset will hold its grand opening with an open house from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Owner Gary Powell of Duxbury is inviting the Cohasset and Scituate residents to join him and his staff. The UPS show truck will be on-site for the occasion.

The UPS show truck will be on-site for the occasion.

Powell sensed that local residents were excited about The UPS Store coming to town when he had customers coming in weeks prior to the store's June 2 opening. Having always wanted to own his own business, Powell researched various options and decided The UPS Store would be the perfect fit, not only for him as an entrepreneur, but also for the community.

SCHOOL TO START

The end of the summer is drawing closer and children(parents too) are getting ready for the first day back to school. Make sure to enjoy the last days with your kids and let them know how much you love them. Just a note to all families in the Cohasset school system, that the PSO calendars will be in the mail and at your doors sometime during the first week of school. Changes, additions, deletions and new information flows in the last two weeks of August, making it down to the wire in terms of printing and mailing time. The most important date for all of you to know for that first week is that yes, school does really start on Wednesday, Sept. 3 for grades 1-12. The first full day for kindergarten is on Friday, Sept. 5.

TOP READERS

If you see a student in Cohasset wearing a lime green book bag, congratulations are in order. These are the students that successfully reached their summer reading goal. Each participant set a personal goal that involved reading everyday or a specific number of books to be completed in the seven week program. As a community we should be proud of the number of successful participants. Great job to all students involved. Keep on reading!

HOLE IN ONE!

Tucker, Ashley, and Keegan Antico would like to congratulate their mom, Muffy "Ace" Antico, for her recent hole in one! The rare golf accomplishment was achieved on the 131-yard, Par 3, second hole of the Cohasset Golf Club during the annual Montessori Community School fund raiser on Monday, Aug. 11, and was struck with a "vintage" Dynatour 5 iron (proving that the clubs do not make the golfer). The children are very proud of their mother, but really miss their father, Paul, who has been playing 24 hours a day ever since, refusing to come home until he too scores an ace.

BOYS OF SUMMER

Cohasset White played in the Braintree Friendship League for eight-year-olds during the month of July. Cohasset White fielded a team of seven- and eight-year-olds and finished 4 - 4, making it to the first round of the playoffs against Braintree American. Fantastic job to a great group of boys! Hats off to coaches Kevin O'Brien, Kevin Dooley and Paul Davis, and the players Connor O'Brien, Mickey Barry, Christian Davis, Teddy Patsos, Michael O'Brien, Conor Dooley, Stephen Maher, Trevor Schramn, Tommy O'Brien, Zach Coggins, Terrance Doonan, Ryan MacKeon, Colin Gideon-Murphy, Foster Eymer, Will Golden and Brendan O'Connell.

Alec Livingstone is the Home Run Derby Champion.

HOMERUN KING

Twelve-year-old Alec Livingstone was named Cohasset Little League's 2003 "All-Star Home Run Derby Champion" during the annual baseball and softball cookout held at Barnes Field earlier this summer.

The day-long event – sponsored by the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association – includes the annual all-star baseball team competitions played among Cohasset's top Little League players.

Alec was chosen as one of 32 all-star players selected from seven teams that form the town's Little League program. Alec walked away as Home Run Derby Champion after competing in a hitting contest where each contestant gets six chances to hit the ball out of Barnes Field for a homerun. Alec hit two balls out of the park and impressed fans with the greatest number of hits near the fence.

Adam Berger came in second place and third place was held by Brendan Doonan. Congratulations to all!

That is all for this week. Get all of your information to me no later than Mondays at noon.

Her green thumb blooms in so many different ways

Harborview tenant with a lot of flower power

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Red-rubber boots sit under a birdhouse in the corner of her garden, begonias spilling over their tops. Bright ceramic pots hold geraniums with little pansies at their feet. Gold high-heeled shoes placed under a tree serve as a quirky planter, adding a touch of the unexpected to Gracie Thompson's garden.

Visitors are greeted by a garden full of character, as they walk up the path to her home at the Harborview apartments. Watering cans sprouting with greens and a white-porcelain cat add another unique touch.

"I like to make it a little whimsical so it puts a smile on someone's face," Thompson said.

This may be the first year "Green thumb Gracie," has been working on the garden at her new apartment, but this is by no means her first gardening experience. Before moving to Cohasset, Thompson lived in Weymouth and was president of the Weymouth Garden Club. She is currently vice president of the Tenants Association at Harborview where she has started a gardening club, which is on a break for the summer. She can't wait until fall when the club will start up again, and she can help others with their gardens.

But for now, with plantings in the ground for the summer months, her main focus is laying down mulch, in a process she calls, "lasagna gardening." A layer of mulch tops a layer of old papers which covers the grass below. This way, Thompson can save herself the back-breaking work of tearing up old grass.

Thompson's garden is a continuing work in progress and enjoys every minute of it. She said it's the type of work that calms the nerves. In the end, the beautiful flowers she grows provide all the reward she needs for her hours of labor. "It takes time for magic," she said.

Thompson's love of the earth and flair for flowers began around the age of 12. While living in California, her family grew various fruits and vegetables, which introduced her to working the land. Eventually, her next door neighbor, a flower grower, sparked an interest that would follow Thompson throughout her entire life.

"I've always had a passion for flowers," she said, which is an interest she is eager to share.

Thompson's granddaughter, Briegh McLelland, takes advantage of her grandmother's knowledge, and is learning about gardens, one flower at a time.

Every week, Thompson and her granddaughter gather bunches of flowers from Thompson's garden to sell at the Farmer's Market on the Common. Briegh eagerly anticipates the Thursday ritual, and arranges her own small bouquets in vases on a special table.

Briegh's mother, who is Gracie's daughter, Shiloh Melanson, said Briegh has the same creative vision Thompson does.

While choosing flowers for her arrangements, Briegh found a snail on one of the leaves, which she excitedly showed to her grandmother..

"Oh, you never know what you'll find," Thompson said. "It's a new visitor to 'flowerland.'"

The flowers Thompson sells at the Farmers Market vary from week to week depending on what's blooming in the garden. This time of year, hydrangeas are abundant but a little wilted from the heat.

"If they don't make it, I can always use them to make a wreath," she said.

It is that kind of creative ability that has Thompson making more than just flower arrangements.

"You can actually do anything with flowers." She has the project to prove it. For this year's Marshfield Fair, Thompson created a giant rainbow trout out of flowers, to be exhibited in the agricultural center's door-decorating contest. "I wanted it to be kind of striking," she said.

Thompson mounted oasis, a soft green spongy material which holds water and is used by florists in arrangements, on a wooden fish she carved herself. She then arranged her flowers to look like the scales and colors of a real rainbow trout. While she said it is a challenge to pick the right flowers and greens for the effect she wanted, the most important part was getting the vision in her mind.

While she didn't win first place at the fair, she did receive an honorable mention. "I guess it was honorable enough to receive mention," she joked.

But Thompson isn't phased by the competition.

"I do things for the fun of it," she said, not to mention that she already has a first-place ribbon from the Flower Show held at the Bayside Expo Center for a scene she created titled, "The Doorway to Paradise."

Thompson been able to use flowers in a range of creations since childhood. As a girl, she helped her neighbor decorate two floats with flowers for the Rose Bowl Parade.

Because Thompson has such talent with flowers, it is no surprise that her children have turned to her to provide floral arrangements for their weddings. She recently made the arrangements for her daughter Shiloh's wedding and will arrange flowers for one of her son's wedding this winter.

"It's at the Red Lion Inn and it's in December, so I have to start planning now," she said.

But before that happens, Thompson will be taking a trip to Florida to help share her decorating and arrangement skills at a friend's home.

"It's a little gift God gave me, or who knows," she said, about her knack with flowers.

Calm before the storm

All may be quiet off the Atlantic seaboard, but according to weather experts this could be a stormy couple of months for those of us who live along the East Coast, as well as those living along the Gulf of Mexico.

Although the hurricane season in New England officially runs from June 1 to Nov. 30, 75 percent of the 40 tropical systems that have impacted New England in the past century have struck during the months of August and September. So be prepared to batten down the hatches.

While hurricane season has got off to a somewhat slow start, with three named storms already in the bank, predictions are calling for an above-average number of hurricanes. Ana, Bill and Claudette have already made their appearances and all eyes are on the tropics for the likes of Danny, Fabian, Mindy, or God forbid — Wanda.

If we get to Wanda… it will truly be a hurricane season like no other.

Ana, Bill and Claudette have already made their appearances and all eyes are on the tropics for the likes of Danny, Fabian, Mindy, or God forbid — Wanda.

Since 1953, Atlantic tropical storms have been named from lists originated by the National Hurricane Center and now maintained and updated by an international committee of the World Meteorological Organization. The lists featured only women's names until 1979, when men's and women's names were alternated. Six lists are used in rotation, except for a few names that have been "retired."

A name is removed from the alternating list if a storm is so deadly or costly that the future use of its name on a different storm would be inappropriate for reasons of sensitivity. If that occurs, the offending name is stricken from the list and another name is selected to replace it.

Several names have been changed since the lists were last used. Four names from the 1995 list have been retired. On the 2001 list, Lorenzo has replaced Luis, Michelle has replaced Marilyn, Olga has replaced Opal, and Rebekah has replaced Roxanne.

Three names from the 1996 list have been retired. On the 2002 list, Cristobal has replaced Cesar, Fay has replaced Fran, and Hanna has replaced Hortense. Two names from the 1998 list have been retired. On the 2004 list, Gaston has replaced Georges and Matthew has replaced Mitch. On the 2006 list, Kirk has replaced Keith. Got that? There will be a test later.

As for the names this year, several of them have the makings to produce not only memorable storms, but memorable headlines. Here's a sneak preview of some suggested headline you might find on these pages if one of these name storms make their way here:

Danny — "Danny is uncanny"
Erika — "Erika — How Swede it is"
Fabian — "Fabian is idle"
Grace — "Saving Grace" or "Grace shows mercy"
Henri — Au revoir, Henri
Isabel — "Isabel rings true"
Juan — "Juan Gone", the nickname given to Texas Rangers slugger Juan Gonzalez.
Kate — "A date with Kate"
Larry — "Larry Legend"
Mindy — "Windy Mindy"
Nicholas — "Nicholas Caged"
Odette — "Bet on Odette"
Peter — "Peter Peters Out"
Rose — "Rose a late bloomer"
Sam — "Sam, I am"
Teresa — "Mother Teresa"
Victor — "To the Victor"
Wanda — "A Storm Called Wanda"

The last severe hurricane to hit Massachusetts was Hurricane Bob in Aug. 1991. Bob, a Category 2 Hurricane, with winds between 91 and 110 mph, caused almost $1 billion in damage. More recently, Hurricanes Edouard (1996) and Bonnie (1998) threatened the Bay State, but veered out into the Atlantic as they traveled up the coast.

In 1999, Hurricane Floyd, although weakened to a tropical storm prior to its arrival in the Commonwealth, demonstrated that these storms are not merely "coastal events". Most of that storm's damage was rain and flood related, causing severe damage as far west as the Berkshires. In fact, some of the most devastating flooding associated with these storms has occurred in Central and Western Massachusetts, according to the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency. Up to 17 inches of rain fell in association with the 1938 Hurricane and 25 inches of rain fell over a five-day period in August 1995 from Tropical Storms Connie and Diane. The city of Westfield received 13.15 inches in a single day.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lost confidence in Supt. Malvey

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to express my outrage at Superintendent Malvey's irresponsible decision to retain confessed wife beater Ivan Klimko in a position in the Cohasset Public Schools. Malvey's tolerance for Klimko, the school business manager who admits to trying to strangle his wife, reveals a dangerous defect in the superintendent's judgment. This revelation requires we citizens of Cohasset to reevaluate Malvey's fitness for the job of superintendent, a job in which resides the power to hire and fire throughout the school system. I no longer trust Malvey to make personnel decisions that so intimately affect the safety and well being of my children. I call on the School Committee to initiate formal and open proceedings to conduct this reevaluation.

As to Klimko, he has demonstrated his unfitness to work in our schools and must be immediately dismissed. We do not tolerate domestic abuse in this community. We would not hire a convicted criminal to work in our schools; it is inconceivable that we would retain one who committed assault while in our school district's employ.

Just to cast this atrocity in perspective, recall how the larger community reacted to Red Sox player Wilfredo Cordero's alleged spousal abuse. It became very clear very quickly that Cordero was no longer welcome in our state. Recall Patriots draft pick Christian Latner, and Sox slugger Jose Canseco. Abuse allegations ended their careers in New England sports. These high profile examples demonstrate that although Superintendent Malvey may not, our community does maintain a zero tolerance attitude towards abusers. Are we as a society more concerned about the behavior of athletes whom we'll likely never meet, or individuals who will work in the buildings in which our children spend their days?

Malvey's position in this case may result from an ethical incompetency – at the very least it is unrepresentative of our community. I feel that it is no longer in our interest in Cohasset to entrust our schools to a superintendent whose judgment is at best suspect. I hope that the School Committee will do its duty to the town and to our schoolchildren and take steps to assure that our schools are entrusted to one whose judgment we can trust.

Iraq war zone is no place for civilians

TO THE EDITOR:

I am truly sorry that a journalist has died in the course of covering the conflict in Iraq.

It's beyond time that these daredevils realize that a war zone is no place for civilians.

Daily the U.K. & U.S. Military face opposition from those who are loyal to Saddam Hussein. It's not fair to the military to be aiming a camera in an area where shoulder fired weapons are likely to be used.

The journalists are getting too close to the action, and putting our side at a disadvantage.

U.S. and U.K. soldiers expose themselves to heightened dangers, so that journalists can be accommodated and that's clearly unfair and is irresponsible.

Rec. is grateful for all the support

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Recreation Department will soon conclude another summer of services for children and adults.

The Recreation Department and staff wish to thank the many individuals and families who participated in a multitude of programs, events and activities during the summer as well as over the past years.

We are also indebted to many other town departments and individuals who have lent their time, effort and experience in support of our services. Without their day to day help, the success of our programs would be severely compromised.

Thank you to Mark Haddad, Town Manager, Carl Sestito, Superintendent, DPW, Derek Lincoln, Maintenance Division, Andy Swanson, Tree, Park and Cemetery Division, DPW, Steve Wigmore, Electrical Inspector, Cohasset School Department, Dr. Ted Malvey, Superintendent and the administrative and custodial staffs of the School Department.

Our very sincere thanks to the Cohasset Police Department, Bob Jackson, Chief of Police, and the Cohasset Police Association, for their magnamous efforts and donations keeping our summer safe, as well as fun. Thanks also to the Cohasset Fire Department, Roger Lincoln, Fire Chief for their support and involvements with the children and programs.

David Wadsworth, curator of Museums is thanked for providing our Playground Program youngsters with tours of our Maritime Museum.

In addition, thank you to Cohasset Plaza Liquors, Shaw's and a special thank you to Stop & Shop Supermarkets for their donations to the Playground Program's annual barbecue.

At risk of missing anyone who has supported our efforts, as the list is long each year, we offer bother apology and gratitude.

Hedlund thanked

STATE SENATOR ROBERT L. HEDLUND:

We were overwhelmed by the recognition of the Senate of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts that we received today. This unexpected honor is a truly humbling experience.

The official citation is the crowning event on the outpouring of support that we have received from the local community.

While we accept this recognition with great pride we cannot do so without ensuring that credit is also given to the more than one hundred loyal volunteers that made the success of the consignment shop possible.

On behalf of the Volunteer Team we thank you.

The Famine Ship: Jeanie Johnston

TO THE EDITOR:

I was disappointed by the lack of coverage by the media given to the replica of the Irish famine ship, the Jeanie Johnston, on its recent visit to Boston.

Traveling in disease-ridden ships similar to the Jeanie Johnston,100,000 starving Irish many of them with scars on their backs from being whipped by English landlords, fled their homes during the Irish famine (1846 - 1851) to Massachusetts's ports. That they survived the harrowing journey at all is a testimony to their grit, faith and daring.

Tragically, the media's lack of attention to the arrival of the Jeanie Johnston in a state in which 23 percent of its residents trace their ancestry to Ireland mirrors a similar lack of attention by the Massachusetts public school system to the experiences and contributions of the Irish in America. Tens of thousands of young children descended from famine immigrants in Massachusetts are taught a considerable amount — as they should be —regarding the Holocaust in Europe, the injustices inflicted on American Indians, and the heroic struggle of African Americans out of slavery, yet they are taught very little about their own journey to freedom.

This is especially ironic given Gustave de Beaumont's observation of living conditions in Ireland in the 1830s: "I have seen the Indian in his forests and the negro in his chains, and thought, as I contemplated their pitiable condition, that I saw the very extreme of human wretchedness; but I did not then know the condition of unfortunate Ireland."

Irish history should be more than a toast on St. Patrick's Day. It is an epic story of a people who fought their way out of slavery and then devoted their lives to freeing other peoples from their chains all around the world. It is a powerful story, and it is time it was told in our schools and in our homes to all our children.

HEALTH NOTES

Taking charge of your health may include different choices

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Whenever the Board has a Health Fair, we include a number of practitioners of unconventional therapies; below is the listing for a recent Fair.

Acupuncture & Massage Therapy Herbal Therapy
Cataract & Glaucoma
Magnet Therapy
Cholesterol & Glucose Screening
Oral Cancer Screening
Chiropractic Care
Osteoporosis - Bone Mineral Density
Blood Pressure Screening
REIKI & Polarity Therapy
Hearing Van

Many of these therapies are conventional and within the mainstream of medical practice. Others such as aromatherapy and magnet therapy are considered 'alternative medicine'. The principal difference between conventional medicine and alternative medicine is the method of assessment of the results of applying the procedure.

Proof of success in conventional medicine must meet rigorous requirements: first, identical procedures must be used for every patient. This requires a written "protocol" or instruction sheet which must be rigorously followed by the practitioner who, by the way, must have credentials accepted by any judging body which is carrying out the evaluation. Next, the evaluators review the procedure for consistency and conformance to practice. Finally, the results must be analyzed and assessed by qualified personnel and reported in a standard manner.

If all of this work has been done with an acceptable level of accuracy, the results are evaluated using statistical procedures. Most such statistical evaluations are done using double blind techniques. That is, approximately an equal number of patients being evaluated are given therapy, medication or treatment, and other patients with the same condition are given other therapy, a placebo

When enthusiastic people who have gotten well using 'alternative' therapy talk to the press, it may sound very different from the published results of a double blind experiment using conventional therapy.

(medication containing none of the 'active' ingredient) or not given anything.

Using statistical methods, the evaluators can then determine the probability of success of a given procedure. The use of statistical methods is an arcane science, because, at some point, the numbers have to become words so that the results can be published. As they say: "figures don't lie, but liars can..." and when the press gets hold of words precisely conveying a scientific conclusion even the best intentioned reporting can go sadly off course.

Now, when enthusiastic people who have gotten well using 'alternative' therapy talk to the press, it may sound very different from the published results of a double blind experiment using conventional therapy. Here is the quandary for those who are trying to make a decision about what to do about their ailments; listen to the earnest, but maybe unscientific reports from someone who doesn't have enough data to satisfy the scientific community, or go for the less thrilling hard road of some known treatment such as chemotherapy.

It's never an easy decision, and doctors are as helpless in giving the right advice as anyone else. Doctors, being, in the main, sensible persons, would prescribe alternative therapy if they were sure: one that it might do some good without doing harm; and two, that it might be better than the more conventional alternative for a patient whose symptoms indicate such a choice.

Because of the rigor involved in a statistical assessment, to be absolutely certain, say 95 percent, requires enormous amounts of data and many patients. Moreover, the large number of variables in medical statistics leaves even the best work with many questions. Every drug sold is accompanied by a listing of known side effects. This is merely a listing of variable performance on human patients. You look at the list, and take the pill or not, depending on how you feel about what might happen. With so many factors affecting the success of a therapy or drug, there is a growing trend toward the use of alternative medical treatment.

Enter a new branch of medicine: Holistic Medicine. Holistic Medicine is defined by the American Holistic Medical Association (AHMA) as "the art and science of healing that addresses the whole person, body mind and spirit. .... Disease is understood to be the result of physical, emotional spiritual, social and environmental factors. .... The holistic practitioner may choose from both conventional and alternative treatments and therapies."

If not Greenbush, then what?

GREENBUSH VIEW

MARTHA A. R. BEWICK

AfTA has long proposed a set of transit alternatives and improvements that serves commuters in the Greenbush corridor at far less cost, and allows the state to put its scarce transit dollars where they belong.

Just one month ago, Governor Romney questioned whether the Commonwealth could afford to build the Fall River-New Bedford and Greenbush rail lines, and indicated that the MBTA couldn't afford to maintain them properly even if they were built. Since then, Greenbush advocates have been outdoors waving the flag for the train, while Greenbush opponents have been indoors, deeply immersed in litigation. There are several suits pending at the Department of Environmental Protection, all dealing with challenges to permit variances. Foot-high collections of affidavits, assembled by AfTA, have been circulating through DEP and MBTA offices, in support of its challenges.

While all this activity is going on, Advocates for Transportation Alternatives believes that the Governor must cancel Greenbush, once his administration finishes measuring the project against "objective criteria."

The criteria being used to evaluate major transportation projects are reported to be due by the first of September.

Assuming that Greenbush doesn't make the cut, what would cancellation of the Greenbush rail mega-project mean? The five towns through which the rail line would run, most of which have strongly opposed the project for years, will be able to get on with their lives. Scarce transit money can be redirected to more cost-effective urban transit projects, which are eligible for federal matching dollars. Low cost transit alternatives can be crafted in the Greenbush Corridor to meet Central Artery mandates, and provide a wider mix of transit options. Increased transit capacity can be opened on the Plymouth Branch of the Old Colony to support smart growth at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station and Cordage Park.

The opposition will come to an end. Local opposition to Greenbush, which goes back almost 20 years, generated the largest town meeting in Massachusetts history when Scituate voters turned out in record numbers to vote "no train" in 1995. That same year, Hingham voted unanimously against the train in another record-sized town meeting, and Cohasset voters also rejected rail — albeit by a narrower margin. Thousands of signatures have been submitted to Governors over the years, and thousands of letters written in opposition to this project. All that energy can be refocused in new and exciting directions.

The lengthy and expensive "mitigation" meetings will come to an end. These negotiations have represented the communities' intense efforts to minimize the noise and vibration impacts, safety concerns, damage to twenty-two National Register historic districts, and other adverse effects readily acknowledged by the MBTA in its environmental documents.

Thousands of homeowners along the track will regain full value of their properties, which has dropped in some instances by $100,000. Business districts bisected by the train will get parking and service entrances back, and small retail shops will be relieved of two years of disruptive construction, and have a better chance of economic survival.

Because of the single track Braintree bottleneck on the Main Line to Boston, limited transit capacity on the Old Colony commuter rail lines, which would have been exhausted by Greenbush, can now be opened for the Plymouth and Middleborough branches. Smart growth development for the South Weymouth Naval Air Station is requiring expanded commuter rail service on the Plymouth branch of the Old Colony; this can now be planned. Plymouth planners want expanded commuter rail service and improved schedules to the Cordage Park development site in Plymouth; this will now be feasible.

Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA) has long pointed out that cancellation of the $464 million (in state dollars only) Greenbush diesel rail project will free up scarce transportation funds. Projects such as the Urban Ring, where the shortage of MBTA funds has slowed planning and investment in construction, can move forward.

Taxpayers who would have to pay bond interest, and also subsidize diesel rail service, for a transit project with limited ridership, will benefit as scarce transportation investment funds are redirected to projects which are also eligible for federal fund matching money. In the cities, the transit projects will meet economic development and environmental justice needs. In these two areas, Greenbush clearly flunks the cost-benefit test. Even the new Program for Mass Transportation gives Greenbush a goose egg in these two categories.

AfTA has long proposed a set of transit alternatives and improvements that serves commuters in the Greenbush corridor at far less cost, and allows the state to put its scarce transit dollars where they belong. We will continue to push for transportation improvements in the coastal corridor, both as Central Artery consent order substitutions and as low impact, low cost transit services for the region. A combined set of intermodal alternatives includes: ferry systems — with better parking, terminal design, greater vessel frequency and utilization of clean air technologies; restoration and improvement of express bus service, parking and terminals; feeder buses serving the Boston terminus of the ferry routes; expediting of the Red Line capacity investments in planned parking, signalization upgrade, and train expansion; and a transfer of commuter rail capacity to the Plymouth branch of the Old Colony.

State funds which have been spent to date on the project can be substantially recouped where investments have been made in real estate and equipment. Since a notice to proceed on construction is not scheduled until 2004, and federal and state wetlands and endangered species permits are not yet in hand, we believe the Governor will call a halt before more good taxpayers' Massachusetts money is thrown after a bad investment.

Martha A. R. Bewick is a member of Advocates for Transportation Alternatives, and has been submitting affidavits and rebuttal affidavits to the Department of Environmental Protection recently, outlining why Greenbush does not serve an "overriding public purpose.

The curse of Aunt Rachel

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It's a story they used to tell where fishermen gathered in Duxbury before the coupon-clippers came and they laid out Washington Street to divide the riff from the raff.

Aunt Rachel once lived by herself in an old run-down fishing shack on the Duxbury shore, an old hag (there is no other word) who dressed in rags and tatters.

Some said she was a widow, that her husband had perished at sea and maybe that was so because her knowledge of the sea and the weather was second to none.

She liked to wander the coast alone at night, pausing to stare out to sea, or sometimes roaming far inland in her lonely search for . . . what? No one knew.

The respectable folk of Duxbury avoided her for she swore like a sailor and didn't care who knew it although sometimes even ministers were known to consult her about a journey.

But the fishermen of the town were Aunt Rachel's firm friends for she summoned up her vast knowledge of the sea and storm to advise them when and where they should launch their boats and voyages.

And when they returned from the sea, the fisher folk left a choice fish for Aunt Rachel's larder. It was a nice arrangement that went on for years and years.

Then one day (the year is never given) a cargo boat from Boston, the Betsy, put into the harbor to avoid a rough spell at sea and a group of strange sailors came ashore.

They met Aunt Rachel and taunted her and pretended to ask her advice but she sensed their insincerity and called them "moon cussers," folks who faked beacons to draw ships ashore to be wrecked.

She cursed their boat and warned them not to sail and when they didn't listen she cursed the men themselves "from hell to high water."

The next morning, before they sailed, they got even with the old lady. They set her hut afire and rushed back to the Betsy, shouting their taunts at her.

Townspeople rushing to the fire found Aunt Rachel standing on a rock, wrapped in an old sailcloth, her arms extended seaward "howling in the most distressing accents."

She watched as the crew boarded the Betsy and hauled in the anchor and put to sea, the crew still shouting imprecations from under billowing sails and she threw another curse upon them.

Whereupon the Betsy struck a reef and sank with all its cargo. The crew was rescued by the townsfolk, all except one man who drowned — the sailor who had touched the fire to Aunt Rachel's hut.

When the excitement died down and Duxbury was quiet again, they went to see to Aunt Rachel. They found the old lady collapsed on the rock, lifeless. They buried her where her hut had been.

And the reef on which the Betsy struck was known as Rachel's Curse.

That's the way it was told to me, anyhow.

POLITICAL NOTES

Democrats award annual scholarship

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee will hold a special, summer meeting on tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. in the Historical Room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 35 Ripley Road, to award the 2003 John F. Walsh, III Memorial Scholarship to James E. French, son of Donna and Jim French and brother of Kate French. The Cohasset Democrats have awarded the Joseph F. Walsh III Memorial Scholarship to graduating high school seniors since 1978.

A short business meeting will follow.

Two-quotes would help eliminate waste

State Sen. Robert Hedlund,R-Weymouth, has co-sponsored legislation, which will require state departments to solicit at least two quotes for state-funded private contracts and contract renewals prior to awarding them. This bill is being introduced as a means of providing a system of checks and balances to ensure taxpayer money is not being wasted.

"By making certain that we are receiving the best possible price on goods and services purchased, this legislation is a common sense approach to saving taxpayer dollars," Hedlund said. "If passed, this bill has the potential to eliminate thousands of dollars worth of waste in state government."

This legislation will only apply to contracts in excess of $50,000, and is currently in the House Committee on Rules.

UMass presidency, a test of Romney's leadership

STATEHOUSE ROUND UP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Leadership made up both a good part, and the good part, of the news on Beacon Hill.

After a fractious drama around the resignation of William Bulger as president of the University of Massachusetts, different elements of which seemed to leave the whole state unhappy, most of the developments the week were positive. And the central issue was leadership.

There was the technical question of who should take the CEO position to run the public university system with campuses in Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and Worcester. Some of the most successful people ever to attend UMass agreed to Bulger's request to serve on the search committee: Jack Welch, the past GE chairman and American business hero, and John Smith, the former head of General Motors.

Philosophically, there was more to it than that. Gov. Mitt Romney approached the UMass situation in a way that caused his opponents to question his leadership. But Grace Fey, his most visible adversary in the Battle of the Bulger, displayed a good deal of equanimity — an important quality in important people, the ranks of whom she's lately ascended.

Romney continued to put forth a proposition that sounds as if he's taking the lead: he said the new president should adopt as a key goal the re-creation of UMass-Amherst, the flagship campus, into a institution on par with the nation's best, such as North Carolina/Chapel Hill. And he said the very best talent should be sought out to lead the whole system to a new level of excellence that could vivify the Massachusetts economy.

Leadership, or lip service? You know what the skeptics said. Players like Sen. Stanley Rosenberg, the Democrat who's represented Amherst in the Legislature since 1987, raised his eyebrows on behalf of his party, to question why Romney is now seeking a powerful president after going to a lot of (televised) lengths to say the president's office is wasteful.

Committed to blocking tax hikes and with 100 other constituencies clamoring for dollars and attention, Romney now has asked the public to judge him by his fulfillment of an extremely ambitious and expensive goal. That would be a test of leadership anyway — a test of whether he can organize people to agree on a goal and then motivate them to accomplish it. After his switch of stance on whether the president's office is necessary, a good many of those people are distrustful as well. So Romney's task of leadership on the UMass problem is even harder than it would be without the trust issue — which is to say, harder than really, really hard.

Committed to blocking tax hikes and with 100 other constituencies clamoring for dollars and attention, Romney now has asked the public to judge him by his fulfillment of an extremely ambitious and expensive goal.

A striking number of people have something at stake: About 59,000 students, 80 percent of them from Massachusetts. About 300,000 alumni, 200,000 of whom live or work in the Bay State. Around 14,000 employees, 4,500 of them faculty. Those faculty members bring in $250 million annually in federal research grants. The school will award 10,000 degrees this academic year. Romney's going to have quite an audience.

To begin with, he'll need Fey as an ally, and he got to work on that in a well-publicized face-to-face last week, which Fey characterized as "terrific." The governor promised her that his appointments to three coming vacancies on the UMass board will be substantive, not politically guided. He'd threatened to deliberately appoint notoriously anti-Bulger people. For her part Fey told the press she and Romney are off to a new start. By letting go of her past resentment and returning the focus to her public mission, Fey displayed a quality nearly always associated with leaders, and too rarely with politicians.

• Romney will survey business chiefs — The administration is posting a survey online for business people to provide input as to what factors are most important to them in business planning and operations. The goal is for state government to respond to the most urgently felt needs by finding out what those needs are, the governor said. The survey was created by the Cambridge-based Monitor Group in collaboration with Professor Michael Porter and the Institute for Strategy and Competitiveness at Harvard Business School.

• Galvin: too much testosterone at Morgan Stanley— A sales-motivation program at the Boston office of Morgan Stanley put the greed of brokers and the firm ahead of the interests of customers, Secretary of State William Galvin charged in an administrative complaint. Galvin oversees the state securities division. The Morgan Stanley culture included terms like "conquer and destroy" as managers urged brokers to sell the firm's own funds more aggressively than others, Galvin alleges.

• SOS hasn't made required ethics appointment — Secretary of State Galvin should have appointed someone to fill a vacancy on the state Ethics Commission seven months ago under state law, and his failure to do so is bothering the four members now serving. Galvin says he's flouting the law because it's so difficult to find qualified people to serve on the commission; members have to agree to have nothing to with politics while on the board and for a year afterwards. "I'm not interested in just filling a vacancy. I want a high quality person there who is going to perform the job correctly," Galvin told the News Service.

• Samaritan vans yielding to commerce after lull — In the 1980s and 90s the CVS Good Samaritan van was a familiar sight on Massachusetts highways. But the company stopped most of its support for the highway assistance program in 2000. Another business stepped forward to take up the slack: Commerce Insurance will provide 22 tow trucks and vans to help stuck motorists during rush hour, company officials said. The Commerce contribution will save the state $400,000.

• Bill to add new state ship-pilot rules slows down — An April 27 oil spill in Buzzards Bay lent new momentum to legislation requiring ship pilots to win special state certification to ply coastal waterways such as the Cape Cod Canal. But that progress appears to have stalled: the bill has been reported out of the Natural Resources Committee and to the Homeland Security and Federal Affairs Committee, which doesn't plan to take it up until fall. Massachusetts is the only coastal state without a requirement that pilots prove to the state that they know the local waters when piloting big ships.

• Prices moderate, condo sales at all-time high — The Massachusetts Realtors Association reported that home prices in the second quarter of 2003 were 6.5 percent higher than Q2 2002. More condos were sold last quarter than any other since records have been kept. The realtors said a combination of low interest rates and a larger inventory are keeping sales relatively brisk despite the lackluster economy; the effects of that economy drove sales down 4.9 percent from Q2 '02. The average home price in Massachusetts stood at $375,196 in the second quarter.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com
August 15, 2003

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on three roll calls from earlier July sessions. All of the roll call votes are on legislative action surrounding Gov. Romney's overrides of items in the $22.1 billion fiscal 2004 state budget. On all three roll calls, the governor was unable to muster any legislative support and both the House and Senate unanimously overrode his veto.

VETERANS' OUTREACH CENTERS (H 4004)

House 154-0, Senate 40-0, overrode Gov. Romney's $165,000 veto reduction (from $1,018,615 to $853,615) in funding for services to veterans including the maintenance and operation of outreach centers. Override supporters said it is outrageous to cut funding for these important centers for people who risked their lives to protect the freedom of the nation. They noted the centers play a crucial role in helping veterans and their families by offering a myriad of services including food, shelter, counseling and career and education services. In his budget veto message, Gov. Romney said he reduced the funding to an amount consistent with his original budget recommendation. (A "Yea" vote is for the $165,000).

Y Y

BREAST AND CERVICAL CANCER TREATMENT (H 4004)

House 157-0, Senate 40-0, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $2,784,551 in funding for the treatment of breast and cervical cancer in low-income, uninsured women. Override supporters said the funding would ensure that these women are treated for these diseases and noted that early treatment would save and prolong many lives. They argued that the federal government offers a 65 percent federal match under this program and noted that unless the governor's veto is overridden, Massachusetts would be the only state in the nation that has not implemented this critical program. In his budget veto message, Gov. Romney said he eliminated the funding because it is not consistent with his original budget recommendation. (A "Yea" vote is for the $2,784,551).

SPECIAL EDUCATION FUNDS (H 4004)

House 157-0, Senate 40-0, overrode Gov. Romney's $6.5 million veto (from $121,600,262 to $115,100,262) in funding for a program that reimburses cities and towns for "extraordinary" costs of special education. Prior to passage of a new state law in 2001, the state only paid communities 50 percent of the cost for the costliest students--the ones in residential schools. Under the new law and formula, the state is required to reimburse communities 75 percent of the cost above approximately $28,000 per student regardless of whether the student is placed in a residential school or in a day school setting. The veto also strikes language that earmarks $400,000 for the costs of borrowing audio taped textbooks by special needs students with disabilities including blindness, visual impairments, dyslexia, cerebral palsy and for an outreach program for special education teachers, students and parents. Override supporters said that full funding is necessary in order to adequately reimburse cities and towns under the new law and argued that these reimbursements are crucial in light of this year's budget cuts in education aid and local aid. They noted that full funding of the new law would also remove the financial incentive for communities to needlessly place students in residential facilities. In his veto message, Gov. Romney said he reduced the funding to an amount consistent with his original budget recommendation. He also noted that he struck the $400,000 earmark because it imposes legislative controls on executive branch management decisions. (A "Yea" vote is for the $6.5 million).

Stormy forecast is predicted

munities, most towns are expected to take care of themselves by means of emergency operations managers. The state does assist towns during hurricanes if need be, but many of the operations managers say they feel like they will be able to handle any situation.

Judge said before a hurricane hits, he is typically on the phone with coastal communities telling them about the weather system so those communities can have the opportunity to pre-position equipment and secure shelters. He noted during a hurricane, there are usually about 80 people or so working at MEMA while it happens, functioning as "the people's 911."

"I don't think there's a broad-brush way to handle a hurricane because every community has its own plan," Judge said. "It's up to us to supply communities with information and have assets available to them if the event exceeds their capability."

In Cohasset, the fire department begins to take action in the days prior to an expected storm. Fire Capt. Mark Trask said the department takes the time to check all the apparatus to make sure it is in good working order, and gets extra fuel in case the pumps are out during the storm.

"We make sure the apparatus is at the top of its operational existence," he said.

Once a warning is issued for the area, emergency crews begin to assess the need for extra help. Trask said that once a storm hits, extra staff is called in so that there are three or four people on each vehicle.

When a hurricane hits, "it becomes a different operation," he said. With flooding hazards and the potential for flying debris, Trask said it is extremely important that response times don't suffer.

"Depending on the intensity and what damage expected," sometimes extra police officers are called into the station, said Police Chief Robert Jackson.

Jackson said the low level areas of town are watched carefully during the outset of a storm to make sure any areas of potential flooding are given adequate notice in case evacuation becomes necessary.

In the event of evacuation, local schools can be used as shelters, Lehr said. If the area of evacuation is small, he said the Second Congregational Church can be used because it has a kitchen and would provide a place for families to stay until their homes are safe.

Lehr said it's a great solution for families that live near the coast that can "return back home when the tide goes down."

"Are You Ready," written by the people at the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) describing how best to survive any natural disaster, including hurricanes is available. Duff, Hingham's emergency management director, said he recommends it highly to anyone who has concerns about hurricanes.

"It's absolutely the best book for people who want to learn more about what to do during a hurricane," Duff said.

During Hurricane Bob in 1991, Cohasset had to call the National Guard out of the Armory in Hingham for backup.

"The National Guard has the trucks," Lehr said, which can provide help during rough conditions. The guard can also provide security on the streets during road blocks.

Duff said there are five types of hurricane categories. Such storms are rated 1-5, one being the weakest type and five being the most severe. He added there hasn't been a Category 3 hurricane on the South Shore since August 1954 with Hurricane Carol. The most recent hurricanes to reach New England, Gloria in Sept. 1985 and Bob in Aug. 91, were Category 2s.

A Category 1 hurricane has winds ranging from 74-95 miles per hour, Category 2 is between 96-110, Category 3 between 111-130, Category 4 between 131-155 and a Category 5 hurricane has winds over 155 mph.

"The chances of getting a Category 3 or Category 4 storm are very slim but again, it's never too early to prepare," he said. "You should be prepared to help yourself and help your neighbors if they need it."

Judge said there are certain steps people can take to ride-out a hurricane. A MEMA "hurricane supply list" details the items people should have on hand which includes canned foods, dried fruit, bottled water, manual can openers, any prescription medications, pet food, first aid kits, duct tape, battery-operated radios, flashlights, matches, battery-operated clocks, work gloves, plastic sheeting and a few others.

"One of the most important things for people is to stay on top of what's happening," Judge of MEMA said. "Monitor the media, if you have power. When you're preparing, think of what you would need if you were going to be isolated for two to three days without power. Everyone has different needs and different creature comforts.

"The fact is, hurricanes can cause a lot of damage. Some people forget how horrendous these situations can actually be. From a human-safety perspective, the actual loss of life should not be huge. The loss of property on the South Shore, on the other hand, will probably be an issue. One of the most important things people need to remember is to take your local officials' advice seriously."

Building hopes around the world through Habitat for Humanity

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Traveling to exotic lands is one of Anne Sexton's favorite things to do. Her office has many different African artifacts, from ebony elephants, to photographs, to a map of the country. She has pictures of her family posing all over the world on her desk, but not one of those trips has been a relaxing vacation.

Anne and her family have been participating in various Habitat for Humanity projects for many years. Peter, Anne's husband, has participated for seven, Anne has for four, and daughter Alissa, a student at Trinity College in Connecticut, recently became involved through a program at school.

Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit program, which seeks to eliminate poverty housing and homelessness from the world, and make decent shelter a matter of conscience and action. Through the program, volunteers come together in partnership with families in need to help build a home for them to live in.

Over the years Anne and Peter have traveled to various countries, including Malawi, Tanzania, South Africa, and Botswana, and have returned to some on numerous occasions. This summer they went to Bolivia.

"It's really amazing and you meet the nicest people," Anne said.

Anne and Peter have lived in Cohasset for 14 years, but neither one was involved with Habitat for Humanity before moving here.

"I don't know how that happened, it just happened," she said.

Through Habitat for Humanity, the Sextons, along with various groups of volunteers, have traveled to countries in need of housing. Over the course of two weeks, group members begin construction on a home for a family in their designated area.

Anne said that sometimes a foundation will be poured before the group's arrival, which was the case on their last trip to Bolivia. By the time their two week stay was over, Anne said her group had started what was sure to be a welcoming home.

"It's really amazing and you meet the nicest people."
— Anne Sexton

Because volunteers only stay for a few weeks, there has to be local support to finish the job upon their departure. Anne said the family the house is built for, as well as many other members of the community helped build the brick house in Bolivia, making it a real community effort. Typically, homes can be finished in about three months.

But in order to participate in any Habitat for Humanity project, the group must be assembled, which over the years has caused Peter to take on the role of leader to his group.

As a leader, Peter is responsible for writing to the Habitat headquarters in Georgia, to make contact with the Global Village program of Habitat for Humanity. Through the Global program, his group can become connected with a Habitat affiliate in the host country. All trips must be planned to countries with an affiliate.

The Habitat affiliate sends Peter applications of people who are interested in participating, and he chooses those he thinks will make a nice group and work together well. After much interviewing, most of which is done over the phone, a team of around 17 is assembled for the trip.

"We've never been disappointed with a group," Anne said.

Once chosen for the program, the participants come at their own expense. For their most recent trip to Bolivia, everyone involved also donated $400 each to a local charity for building supplies.

While participating in the program, volunteers work five days a week, so Peter plans outings for the weekend, Anne said. Usually, trips include travel to the outskirts of the city they visit, and the local people who work on the project are invited to come along as well.

But for all the positive experiences the trips bring, the conditions of the area are not always pleasant.

"For two weeks, it can be a real hardship," Anne said.

During her most recent trip to Bolivia, it was their winter and the hotel her group stayed at had no central heating. However, Anne is quick to point out that volunteers don't go on these trips to "live in luxury," they are there to provide help to people who need it.

Along with being prepared for the weather, certain health precautions need to be taken, including proper shots. Also, being careful about what they eat and drink is imperative for volunteers. But for the Sextons, the potential for sickness doesn't outweigh the valuable service they are providing.

"These are risks that you take," Anne said.

In addition to the Sextons' group involvement in Habitat for Humanity, Peter participates very frequently in Jimmy Carter's Habitat for Humanity Projects. Anne said Peter travels with Carter and has visited many countries including the Philippines and Korea. By lending his name to the cause, Carter helps spark the interest of many volunteers.

"When he goes, it's a blitz build," Anne said, with roughly 100 homes built during each one-week time frame.

Perhaps because of the success of her different trips, Anne said she and Peter are already planning their next Habitat for Humanity trip and are looking at Chile as their next destination. However, she said she has a place for Africa in her heart that may require another trip, even though they've already been three times.

"I love Africa. It gets into your blood."

Wakeman nominated for women's sports hall of fame

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Frannie Wakeman has fond memories of sailing the waters of the Atlantic seaboard, its salty ocean air filling the tall canvas sails. For many years, the 89-year-old Cohasset resident sailed competitively and became a certified judge for the sport, which has landed her a nomination into the New England Women's Sports Hall of Fame, or NewFund.

"This happened a long time ago, so it's history to me," she said.

But the modest Wakeman has a history of very prestigious awards spanning the length of her career. She is a four-time winner of the Adams Cup, winning from 1935 to 1938. She also served as a Trustee of the Cup from 1947 to 2001. Because of her accomplishments and dedication to the sport, the US Sailing National Championship Sportsmanship Trophy, the New England Women's Junior Single Handed trophy, and the Massachusetts Bay Women's Championship Trophy are all named in her honor.

Of her many accomplishments, Wakeman just smiled and said, "I had a good crew."

Wakeman started he career on the waters of Cohasset. Living on Beacon Hill, she and her family spent summers on the coast, and at the age of 12, she began to sail.

Years ago, Wakeman said sailing was much different than it is now, especially with the change in boats. She said today, boats are much lighter than they used to be and the crew doesn't need to be as physically strong to keep control of the boat.

"Today, it's a different ball game," she said.

One other major change to the sport is the number of women who now compete. In Wakeman's racing days, there weren't nearly as many women in the competitions.

"There are a lot more women sailors now than there were then. Now, there's a lot of competition, and this girl has done very well," she said, looking over at granddaughter, Whitney Davis.

It seems the sailing genes have been passed on to 17-year-old Davis, who recently won the Mass. Bay Sailing Junior Regatta at the USA Junior Olympic Sailing Festival, held in Hull. Serving as skipper on a 420, she competed against 89 other boats, which all started at the same time

"That is the most amazing thing I've ever heard," Wakeman said, adding that when she used to race, there would be around six boats at the start.

Since winning the Jr. Olympic Festival, Davis has qualified for a national regatta, but that will be the last race she'll compete in at the junior level. She'll then move on to bigger regattas and compete against sailors with more experience, but she said she's up for the challenge.

"It's wonderful my granddaughter has done so well," Wakeman said.

But not only does Wakeman have sailing experience, she has judging experience as well. After finishing her competitive sailing career, Wakeman became a certified judge of women's sailing in the late 1980s and traveled all over the United States for competitions. She judged in many states from Texas, to California, to Washington.

"That was a wonderful experience. That's one of the things sailing led me to," she said.

During her travels, Wakeman made many friends all over the country and said she still keeps in contact with friends in Texas.

"The contacts you make through sailing you don't forget," she said.

A reception for the nominees will be held Oct. 2 at the Sheraton in Boston to recognize New England women who have excelled and often pioneered in competitive sports. To cast a vote for Wakeman, please visit the NewFund web site at www.newfund.org.

Historical society celebration is planned

This year, the Cohasset Historical Society is celebrating its 75th anniversary in the Paul Pratt Building which has been a building of major importance to the town for 100 years. Even though not all the boxes, nor all the gowns will have been unpacked, the Society is going to throw the signature event of the year to commemorate these achievements. The event, which will highlight the town's maritime history, is in the planning stages. Save the dates Oct. 2, 3 & 4 for "At the Edge of the Sea," a three-day art show/fundraiser. Anyone who would like to volunteer or share ideas for this celebration, call 781-383-1168.

South Shore Senior Softball League continues to grow and flourish

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

I gotta be honest. When I was handed the assignment to write a piece on the South Shore Senior League last summer, it was kind of strategically set up to be a series of quick-hitting phone interviews with a few of the guys.

I did venture out to the Scituate ballfield, to at least this time put some faces to the names. What I ended up getting was so much more.

Guess it's time to eat some of that humble pie.

First of all, the South Shore Senior League is the furthest thing from a small handful of broken down, grumpy old men. Instead, what the SSSL is made of is a vibrant, ever growing legion of 55+ years young ballplayers, playing a schedule guys and ladies half their age would have a hard time keeping up with. What started out as a 15 or so man pickup game four years ago has since blossomed into a formidable 125-man league

"I love it because it gives you the chance to play ball again. And that's great for somebody like me, because I lived on the field as a kid."
Scituate's Dave Hockman, 60

While the story did have a nice human interest ring to it: I figured It'd be more likely falling off than sitting on the edge of my Central Park seat at 9AM on a Sunday, muddling through the seemingly endless ticks of the clock watching, as a group of "seasoned veterans" rekindled their Glory Days flames.

This time around, however,

Rox win a wild one over Jackals

Brockton wins series opener to remain just two games behind Quebec

Little Falls, NJ- The Brockton Rox erased two four-run deficits and beat the New Jersey Jackals 9-7 Monday in the opener of a three-game series at Yogi Berra Stadium. The win kept the Rox (19-15) two games behind first-place Quebec (20-12) in the North Division second-half standings with 12 games remaining in the regular season.

Jake Daubert's RBI single in the top of the seventh inning broke a 6-6 tie and gave Brockton the lead for good. The hit, which came against Jackals reliever Chris Keelin (2-4), scored Mel Rosario from third base, who had doubled one batter earlier. Abner Arroyo delivered an RBI double two hitters later to score Daubert to make the score 8-6.

After the Rox scored an insurance run in the eighth on an RBI hit by Mike Torres, the Jackals cut the lead to 9-7 on a run-scoring single by Joe Kerrigan with two outs in the bottom of the inning. Conor Brooks then was called in from the bullpen, and he recorded the final four outs to notch his league-leading 17th save in his league-leading 38th appearance this season.

Brooks faced danger in the ninth when Kevin Grijak led off with a single and advanced to second on an error by Torres in right field. The next batter Travis Bailey hit a blast to center field that seemed destined for extra bases, but Brockton's Darren Blakely made a leaping catch in front of the fence for the first out. Brooks then retired Scott Samuels on strikes and Carlos Pagan on a pop-out to end the game.

Trailing 4-0 after two innings and 6-2 after three, the Rox rallied to tie the game with four runs in the top of the fourth against New Jersey starter Trevor Marcotte. With two outs, Saul Bustos reached on an infield single that Marcotte threw into right field, allowing Rosario to score and Daubert to advance to third.

Blakely followed with an RBI infield single that scored Daubert to cut the deficit to 6-4. Then with two aboard, Craig Lewis drilled a triple scoring both Bustos and Blakely, tying the game and chasing Marcotte from the mound. Marcotte, who had beaten Brockton in each of his previous three appearances against them this season, allowed six runs (five earned) in 3 2/3 innings.

The Jackals had built the lead against Brockton starter Joey Baker, who gave up six earned runs and nine hits in four innings pitched, including a three-run home run to Chris Rowan and a two-run dinger to Carlos Pagan. Baker was relieved by newly-acquired right-hander Kevin Lynn with the score tied 6-6 and the bases loaded with no outs in the fifth inning. Lynn proceeded to get out of the jam without any runs scoring, setting the stage for Brockton's late inning rallies.

Lynn (1-0) pitched 3 2/3 innings of solid relief to earn a win in his first appearance with Brockton this season. He allowed only one run on two hits, hours after joining the team for the bus ride to New that takes to the field on a three game-per-week summertime calendar (the SSSL also has a travel team, headed by Coach Bob Taylor).

And while that might seem like a grueling agenda for anybody, let alone a corps of seniors, it is far from that for these diehards.

Cohasset's Larry Shultz, who retired last June after teaching for 35 years at the Deer Hill School, had been looking for outlets to help him remain active when he first heard of the SSSSL this winter. He wintered in Florida for the first time this past winter, and joined a softball league while he was there. He was only too happy to continue playing the game of his youth when he returned north.

"I went there looking to play ball and stay in shape, and I'm having a lot of fun," said Shultz, 58, who also referees high school soccer and runs a summer youth soccer camp in Cohasset. "This league is more about fun than competition, but they've got some great players down there too. It's good softball."

As one of the younger players on the team, Ron, to no surprise, has been used primarily as an outfielder.

"Yeah, they've got me running all over the place out there, but I've got no problem with that."

"I look forward to getting out here [each time] and playing," says 58-year old Peter Andrew of Duxbury.

Dave Hockman of Scituate agrees. "I love it because it gives you the chance to play ball again," the 60-year old says. "And that's great for somebody like me, because I lived on the field as a kid."

SSSL 1, Logan 0.

Secondly, what any cynic (speaking from experience) will find out within thirty seconds of catching a South Shore Senior League contest is these ballplayers wipe out any foolish myth the guys have lost game over the years. From the warm-ups to the first pitch to the final out: if you need that strong-cup-of-coffee version of America's Pastime to justify your trek to the park first thing on a weekend morning, the SSSL is that double espresso.

In the course of three innings between the #1 and #2 teams, there were a number of ESPN-esque highlight plays jolting a fans' nervous system (including a sweet frozen-rope takedown by the #2 team pitcher), making one all but forget these guys were in their quote-unquote "sunset years" of life.

"Oh yeah, we can still play the game at a very high level," said 68-year old Jim Hyde of Scituate, one of the founding members of the senior league. One case in point is the 4-year, unbeaten streak of 70-year old Humarock's Joe Dominico, who has yet to taste defeat as the SSSL's star hurler.

"That's not too bad (an accomplishment) for an old guy," Dominico laughed.

South Shore Seniors shutting out Logan, 2-0.

Finally, and maybe most importantly, for anyone who simply loves the overall game played with the bat and ball (its traditions, stories and camaraderie): if one thinks the voices heard on the field will resonate nothing more than aches and pains dialogue coming from a bunch of old timers who can't wait to call it a day and hit the couch to recoup again, the players of the SSSL prove you wrong.

While they do, every now and then, manage to make you laugh with a comedic reference to their mortality ("I'm a walking Alleve commercial," jokes 58-year old Peter Andrew of Duxbury), instead, what you're more likely to hear is hearty laughter and the stories of yesteryear from a group of guys who manage to whimsically bring a young whippersnapper back in time with them.

There's the tale of the one-time ace of the Cape Cod League. There's the ditty of the former batboy to Teddy " Ballgame" Williams. There's that first trip to a Major League ballpark to see the old Boston Braves lace 'em up at Braves Field (now Boston University's Nickerson Field). If for no other reason (although that's selling these guys very, very short), the lore and fun alone makes it worth catching a South Shore Seniors game.

"It's a good bunch of guys that come down here. We really do have a lot of fun," says 64-year old Pat Thompson of Marshfield.

Dominico adds: "We have a great time together. The companionship is wonderful."

George Bernard Shaw once told us that youth is wasted on the young. He also said that even the youngest of us may be wrong sometimes. On both counts, the men of the South Shore Senior League proved his writings to be true.

If they could somehow bottle up the energy that a teenager has in his or her possession but chooses to waste on sleep and video games, then the #1 and #2 teams are still at Central Field today, playing themselves one intense game that's deep, deep into extra innings.

As far as youth needing time to acquire wisdom? I think that was validated 365 days ago, when it was thought Ma Bell would be just as good a way to interview the men of the South Shore Senior League.

Final score. SSSL blanks Logan, 3-zilch.

Rox win a wild one over Jackals

Jersey Monday morning.

Blakely, playing against his former team for the first time since joining the Rox last week, went 2-3 with two RBI and two runs scored. Daubert had three hits and a walk and two runs scored. Kerrigan paced New Jersey by going 3-5 with an RBI and a run scored.

The Rox and Jackals continued the series Tuesday in Little Falls. After concluding the current six-game road trip last night, the Rox return home for their final home stand of the season beginning Friday August 22nd against the Bangor Lumberjacks. Tickets are still available for all remaining home games at the Rox box office, via the web-site (Brockton Rox.com), or by calling (508) 559-7070.

News and Notes

Nestor Smith missed his first game of the season Friday night, after re-aggravating a groin injury in Thursday's game. Smith, who has been battling the injury since late June, is not expected to return until Monday in New Jersey at the earliest. Smith's streak of hitting safely in 15 consecutive road games came to an end Thursday night, as he went 0-for-1 before leaving the game in the second inning. The streak, which dated back to July 9th, matched the longest road hitting streak in the league this season (New Jersey's John Anderson also hit safely in 15 straight road contests)....Three Rox were ejected from Friday's game: Saul Bustos, Bobby Brown and Ed Nottle. This came one night after Mike Davis was tossed from Thursday night's ball game....The Rox purchased the contract of All-Star outfielder Darren Blakely Wednesday from the New Jersey Jackals, in return for cash and two players to be named later. Blakely, who was hitting .307 in 71 games with New Jersey coming this season, has gone 3-for-8 with a home run and a stolen base in his first two games with the team. Brockton is still playing with 21 out of a possible 22 men on the active roster, with Sunday being the league deadline to add a playoff-eligible player....The Rox are hitting .284 on the road this season in 37 games, but only .256 in 38 home games. Overall, the Rox team batting average now stands at .270 for the season, tied for second-highest in the league with New Jersey, behind Elmira (.286)....The Rox will return to Brockton following tonight's game, then have a day off Sunday before opening a three-game series in New Jersey on Monday night. Brockton is scheduled to start Joey Baker, Mike Marchesano and Greg Salvevold in the series versus the Jackals.

Wild Rox?

Should North Shore or New Jersey repeat as a division champion this half, a wildcard team would be selected to complete this season's Northeast League playoffs. The spot would go to the team with the best overall record that failed to win its division in either half. Here are the current wildcard standings (with North Shore and New Jersey already eliminated as first-half winners):

Team	Record	games back
Brockton	40-35	——
Quebec*	40-35	——
Elmira*	39-35	0.5
Bangor	36-41	5.0
Berkshire	33-44	8.0
Allentown	28-48	12.5

the main sports guy for a major weekly paper since his freshman year of high school — a paper which, mind you, has been nominated for General Excellence by the New England Press Association in all four of those years.

What were you doing when you were a freshman in high school? More to the point, what were you writing? Speaking personally, I was pleased as punch when any of my original compositions scored me anything over a C grade.

Speaking on a more personal level, Dave has been my rock. I do not exaggerate when I say this job as Sports Editor of seven papers could have been a nightmare if I didn't know that — come rain or shine, hell or high water—there would be at least a couple of timely, relevant and extremely well written articles coming from Dave on time, week in and week out. I'm already panicking about the thought of starting the fall sports previews in a few weeks without him.

And that was probably the most amazing aspect of the job Dave has done for the Mariner. In my three-plus year tenure with CNC, I have gone through dozens of stringers and reporters, including a handful of high schoolers who (like Dave) professed a real love of journalism and several adults who said they were interested in pursuing journalism professionally.

While most of them fell by the wayside, daunted by things such as deadlines and the need to work a story to its logical conclusion, Dave has never failed me. If a coach didn't return his numerous calls, he'd track down a member of the team. If a story would fall completely through, he'd go in search of another that would suit our purposes and interest our readership.

In short, by the time he was a young teenager Dave had already exhibited journalistic instincts that far surpassed many of the "professional journalists" I've come across who were twice or more his age.

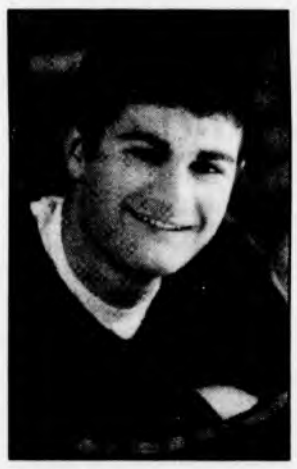
As I got to know Dave better over the years, however, this eventually stopped surprising me. First off, as most of you have probably already surmised, Dave is mature beyond his years. The greater factor, however, at least so far as this job is concerned, is his genuine passion for journalism.

It was this passion that has pushed him to never miss a deadline and never give anything less than his full attention to a story. It was this passion that drove him to lobby hard for the creation of a school newspaper, and then putting his money where his mouth was when that effort paid off by applying for and then being asked to serve as Editor of "The Spinnaker" for its maiden voyage this past school year. And it is this passion which has inspired him to major in English in college with an eye toward a career in journalism.

Dave, as his high school resume bares out, could pursue virtually any career to which he felt inclined, and many, many with far more lucrative possibilities than journalism. Plus, for crying out loud, he's going to Harvard. With his God-given gifts and abilities, there's no telling how many big doors might swing open before him in any number of high paying fields.

And don't think I've kept these thoughts to myself with him.

But Dave just smiles when I bring it up and replies: "This is what I love doing."



Dave Ingber

"Since I was about five years old, the first thing I do every morning is look at the newspaper," said Dave, who last week penned his 300th article for the Mariner. "It started out with box scores and standings, moved over to sports articles, then to columns.

"And now I actually read the whole thing," he added with a laugh.

Clearly, this morning ritual gave Dave a deep appreciation for not only the power of the press, but also the responsibility that goes along with that power.

"There's just something extremely satisfying about giving a mass of people information," he said. "I like covering events and seeing the way it develops and then thinking about how my story should take shape. It's also nice to know I might be the one who recognizes that unsung hero that might not get any press if not for me."

Of course, taking the Mariner Sports Correspondent's job at such a young age was not without its daunting episodes. Having to interview and then write about coaches who were also his teachers and the school's upperclass sports stars could be, he admitted, "real intimidating."

"Fortunately, the first interview I had was with (football coach) Tony Rolfe, and he was just great," recalled Dave with a laugh. "I had this long list of prepared questions. He could probably tell I was nervous, but he put me at ease and was real patient with me. That was a great way to start things off."

He did add, though: "there were a few interviews in that first year or two that weren't that easy."

Another challenge was presented when Dave was asked to cover sports he actually played. Reporting on the varsity basketball team when he was a member of the JV squad as a freshman and sophomore proved somewhat awkward at times, but that was nothing compared to covering the swim and tennis teams, especially when he was a star performer for both teams by his junior year. Dave adopted a pen name for a while, but soon gave that up, noting "it seemed everyone knew it was me anyway, so it got kind of silly."

"I usually struggled with when and how to mention myself in a story," said Dave, who earned Mariner All-Scholastic honors for tennis each of the last three years (for doubles play as a sophomore, and first singles play the past two). "If I won a big match in tennis, I didn't really want to run it too big, but then I'd start thinking it was a big win for the team too, and maybe I should say more about it. That's one part of the job I won't miss."

In the end, Dave worked through this journalistic conundrum, it says here, with perhaps a bit too much modesty. Then again, I didn't have to walk the same corridors he did. Of course, Dave is pretty modest by nature. I could tell right off, for example, he was far from crazy about the idea of this little piece.

But he worked through the embarrassment and honored my request for an interview, just as he worked through all the other difficulties that might have proved too daunting for many others attempting to make a go of it in this profession.

Of course, I wasn't the least bit surprised. After all, he'd never let me down before.

Marinerland odds and ends

TOUCHING ALL BASES

LOU MOLINARI

Odds and ends, bits and pieces, and just wondering why the town wasn't named Ducksbury, instead of Duxbury? Is it possible somebody didn't know how to spell Duck and used an x in place of ck?

While on the subject, how come Marshfield wasn't named Marshrock or Marshland or Marshmallow. The rock worked for Brant and of course, Rock worked for land and of course, at that time, nobody really knew what to do with mallows until a kid discovered them in 1889 during a campfire, much too late to name the town.

Don't forget the town of Pembroke. Did the founding fathers have a premonition of what would happen to the town's finances in the 2000s? Was the town really supposed to be called Pembrook?

Before I go broke, it's time to earn a check or at least make an attempt at earning one.

Odds and ends

Remember when the Marshfield Fair was synonymous with horse racing. The good old days and the tote boards that resembled sundials. Who cared how they looked. The horse numbers were recorded and the bets were made. It got the job done.

The horses are history and the motorhead action keeps moving forward. Bettencourt Honda/Suzuki of West Bridgewater sponsored the SuperX event at the Marshfield Fair Tuesday night.

Among the drivers entered in the race were Pembroke's Keith Johnson and Tony Lorusso of Randolph, among others. The race had a posted purse of $4,500. Also on the Tuesday night schedule was an exhibition motox event.

The Fair also has a Demo Derby set for Friday at 6:30 p.m. Figure 8 events are scheduled for Saturday at 6:30 p.m.

Charlie Belknap's Hollywood Stunt Show will be held twice on Saturday at 2 and 7 p.m.

A long way from the days of the oatburners to the current days of the gasburners.

More strange names

Talk about a visionary. How did one of our founding fathers have the foresight to know that someday the country would have a machine, a fax machine, that would send messages over a yet to be discovered apparatus called the telephone. Of course, the name of the town, Halifax. From the words Hail as to greet and fax as in fax.

And how did the founders come up with the name Whitman, and not Whitwoman? Was it that people back then just didn't give a whit about women?

Is it true that after a night of much celebrating at Ye Olde Mutton and Boar Pub, a group of the revelers came up with such a hangover, they decided to rename the town Hangover. One reveler was said to say, "Gee, never again." So the "g" was dropped.

One more like that and guess who will be dropped.

Bits and pieces

What a difference the opening of Pembroke High School in the fall of 2004 will make for high school sports in the area. For one thing, when the school opens a year from now, Pembroke will join the Patriot League, which means Hanover has a new team to face.

Geography-wise, it's going to be a lot more comfortable and cheaper to make the trip. Last year the Hanover High football team had to journey to Newburyport for a game and this fall the Hanover team will be at Dennis-Yarmouth.

The new school also gives East Bridgewater High a Thanksgiving Day rival. EBHS went several years of searching for a Thanksgiving Day foe, going without a game last year when Bellingham moved to the Tri-Valley League.

Along with the new school and the enlarging of the Patriot League, Hanover hockey also returns to league action. Hanover had been an independent in hockey for the past couple of years. The Indians will now have a home.

All it took was a whole bunch of millions of dollars to create the new high school. It's going to be interesting to see what happens to Silver Lake Regional High when the Pembroke kids have a home of their own.

Will the Atlantic Coast League figure large in the Silver Lake plans? Some teams in the Old Colony League will be a lot bigger than Silver Lake.

Can you just imagine the chit-chat (arguing) among athletic directors as they stake out their territory?

Have you noticed how many veteran athletic directors decided to hang it up over the last couple of years?

Another strange name

What if there was a collaborative school? Say for instance, Sandwich High, Hamilton High and Rye, N.Y. High.

Would the collaborative be called the Ham and Rye Sandwich? I'm not crazy about Rye. Too bad, Wheaton College couldn't be used in the mix.

Be patient folks, the quiet season is almost over and the odds will end.

2004 Seadogs/AAU baseball clinic/tryouts on deck

Starts Aug. 23-24 in Braintree & E. Bridgewater

HINGHAM – The South Shore Baseball Club has announced its clinic/tryouts schedule, starting August 23-24 in Braintree and East Bridgewater, for the Seadogs/AAU Travel Team Baseball Program's 2004 season.

The Seadogs will field seven teams in 2004 — 10-and-under through and including 16-and-under. Players are selected from a series of clinic/tryouts held throughout the ssummer, fall and winter.

"Members of our Seadogs program will have an opportunity to experience a unique vacation with family members, meet new friends, and have lasting memories," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. said. "They'll also benefit from skill development, quality coaching, and tournament experienced, national competition."

The Seadogs program is part of the South Shore Baseball Club, which has been a member of the Massachusetts Association of the Amateur Athletic Union since 1994. The Seadogs compete against other Massachusetts AAU teams for the right to qualify for the AAU National Baseball Championships held all across the country. The Seadogs program is intended to supplement, rather than replace, local Little League, Babe Ruth, or American Legion baseball programs.

Encampment at Ft. Revere in Hull is this weekend

IT'S HAPPENING

Fort Revere Park celebrates the 225th anniversary of the arrival of Adm. D'Estaing's Royal Marines at Ft. Independence with a two-day encampment featuring British ("His Majesty's First Regt. of Foot Guards"), American (Hingham Militia and Billerica Minutemen), and French troops (Fort Revere French Marines and Regiments Saintonge and Bourbonnois) this weekend.

Encampment visitors will see demonstrations of 18th century camp-life, medical practices and weaponry. Troops will be drilling, cannons will be fired and a sneak attack by the British will make things lively. "This is a really special opportunity for re-enactors" says Fred Hills, a re-enactor from Hingham. "It's truly unique to commemorate an historic event on its 225th anniversary on the actual site that the history was made."

The Fort Revere Revolutionary War Encampment will be held from 10a.m. to 4:30p.m. on Saturday and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Sunday and will be free to the public. An actor portraying Susanna Haswell Rowson, who cared for a dying British Royal Marine and then buried his body in her Hull Village garden yard after a battle at Boston Light in 1775, will make a special appearance at the Hull Public Library at 3p.m..

Those who may be interested in the Living History hobby are invited to attend the encampment, as members of the various re-enactor units will be actively recruiting new members and will be available to provide details except "when called to duty". As Hills points out, "There are many opportunities to participate in 225th anniversaries of Revolutionary War battles until October 2006."

The no hassle way to pedal in Wompatuck State Park

Shop provides bicycles to rent

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Even visitors who leave their bikes at home for one reason or another can enjoy the biking opportunities at Wompatuck State Park – at least on the weekends.

That's because, weather permitting, 1-2-3 Bikes of Hanover rents adult and children's bicycles Saturdays and Sundays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the parking lot across from the Visitor Center.

"When you get on a bike it's up to you to get it to go," said 1-2-3 owner Norman Griswold of Scituate. "There's a very nice feeling of independence."

"When you visit Wompatuck, you see how undisturbed much of the land is. It's glorious."
—Norman Griswold, 1-2-3 owner

No one is more familiar with the pleasures — and challenges — of pedaling than Griswold, who rode his bike to Florida in 1989. "It was quite an experience, taking a month to accomplish," he said. "I left in November so the weather was cold for most of the ride."

In 1990, Griswold began using his bike more and his van less. He found he enjoyed the nine-mile ride from his home in Scituate to the bike shop.

Riders may rent a bike at Wompatuck for the flat fee of $10 for up to an entire day. Group rentals are available by prior arrangement, with a $100 minimum charge. When not in use, the bikes are kept in a 40-foot storage container at the site.

A number of groups from Boston, averaging 10 to 15 bicyclists, enjoy biking in the park as do many residents of Hingham and other South Shore communities. Biking families are a common sight, as are "visitors on the go from another state or country who didn't bring their bikes, people from the city who don't own a bike because they can't fit one in their apartment, or campers who want to try biking but didn't bring theirs along," Griswold said. "When you visit Wompatuck, you see how undisturbed much of the land is. It's glorious."

One of the benefits of biking, he notes, is that bikers often are having such a good time enjoying the scenery that they forget biking is also good for their health. "They don't think of it as exercise until they come to a hill," Griswold said with a laugh. "Besides, biking changes a person psychologically. You can go from being uptight and nervous to feeling much more relaxed."

1-2-3 Bikes has rented bicycles at the park for the past nine years, ever since the Department of Environmental Management — which oversees the park — sought a business willing to rent bikes there.

Griswold thought it was a good idea and responded to the request. The rest is history. The bikes he rents are the same brands he sells in the shop — Iron Horse and Fuji. Griswold also rents a couple of state-supplied hand-powered cycles for handicapped individuals at the same price. There are also a few mountain bikes (with full suspension) for the more daring at $20. He also has children's bike seats and covered trailers.

There's no extra charge to borrow a helmet from the wide variety offered.

"It's important to wear one because you can be pedaling lightly only to find yourself reaching 20 m.p.h.," Griswold said. "You have to expect the unexpected, and when that happens, you better be wearing a helmet." State law requires helmets on children 12 and under, but Griswold wants everyone to wear one no matter what their age. "It's like a small security you have out there. Biking isn't like being inside a big car," he said.

Overall, biking is easier today than ever before, according to Griswold. "Shifting is easier and the brakes work better. Each year bike experts discover new ways to improve the biking experience and make it more comfortable."

In good weather, an average of eight to 10 individuals, sometimes in groups, rent bikes during the weekend. But even when business is slow, Griswold has no complaints. "It's like a hobby for me. I like to go to Wompatuck anyway with my golden retriever, Teddy Bear, who loves meeting everyone there," he said. "He's very sociable."

The service operates from around Memorial Day until the end of October. "Fall is a good time to ride at Wompatuck. We also get a more consistent crowd," Griswold said. "The foliage should be great this year because of all the rain."

His father, Perley Griswold, started his bike business in Hanover in 1966. The younger Griswold worked at the shop for many years as he "learned the ropes." He managed the shop for his father from 1979-1989 and then agreed to take it over. Griswold remembers the bike boom of the late 1970s, "when biking began to be taken more seriously. It caught on as a viable form of transportation, too. Afterall, autos burn gas – which is a total luxury," he said. "What I like about biking is its potential. We can have a cleaner environment riding on our own power. Besides, it builds up your muscles and lungs and you arrive at your destination with more peace of mind than when you're driving a car."

She has a twinkle in her eye, a smile on her lips and autism.

Rosie's family understands that for Rosie, and the more than one million Americans like her who are living with an autism spectrum disorder, research offers hope. That's why they joined forces with 7,000 other people in Boston last year, to raise money for the National Alliance for Autism Research (NAAR), the first organization in the country dedicated to funding and accelerating biomedical research to unlock the mysteries of autism spectrum disorders. To date, NAAR has committed $14.9 million to directly fund autism research - more than any other non-governmental organization in the U.S. Most of the money raised for NAAR comes from the Walk F.A.R. Cambridge artist Muriel Mitchell's works will be on display through the end of the month at Plymouth's Sparrow House Museum.

Abstract Ireland

Cambridge artist shows works at Plymouth's Sparrow House

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Ireland is well regarded as, among other things, a land of bold, striking colors. Particularly its various shades of green, blue and gray, evoking the various shades of land, water and granite respectively.

Countless artists of all media have attempted to capture this spectrum in images of concrete, representational form with varying degrees of success. But a relative few have tried while working in the abstract form, which on some equally abstract levels might even have a more universal or openly interpretive appeal.

One artist offering interpretations of Irish land and seascapes through an abstract eye is Cambridge oil painter Muriel Mitchell, whose exhibition of stylized canvases, simply titled New Works, is on view in the gallery space at Plymouth's Sparrow House Museum through Aug. 30.

"My work evokes the memory of growing up in Ireland surrounded by a landscape dominated by the color green," said Mitchell. "Whether it is the soft hills of Dublin, the small harbors where the sea meets the land in a space that is defined by the gray-blue of the sea, the darker gray of the granite walls or the myriad greens of the hills...it all comes together in this interpretation of a landscape remembered and transformed by time."

Born in Ireland, Mitchell attended the National College of Art in Dublin before moving to Massachusetts in 1965. She earned degrees in English Literature and Psychology in addition to her art studies and also studied at the New England School of Photography. This led to a long-running, earlier photography career which included teaching for six years at the DeCordova Museum School in Lincoln, MA, and then at the Danforth Museum School in Framingham. She also exhibited her photography in Ireland and the U.S.

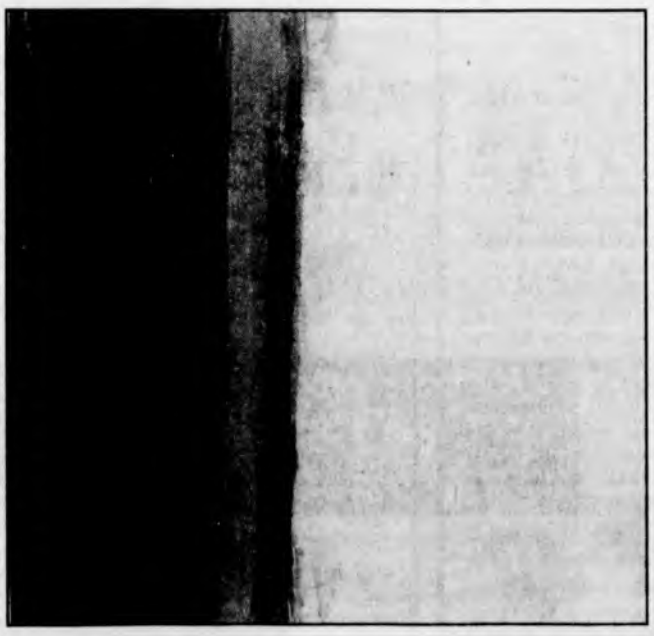
Titles such as "Wicklow Hills," "Dalkey," "Dublin Bay" and "Lough Darg" among Mitchell's small and medium-sized canvases, paperworks and monoprints leave no doubt of her show's Irish theme and focus.

Mitchell began extending her talents to prints and painting in the mid 1980s, and was exhibiting frequently in juried group and one-person shows in Boston and Ireland by the middle of the following decade. Some of the Boston-based venues have included The First Impressions Gallery, Cambridge Art Association, 125 High Street Gallery and the Bromfield Gallery.

Titles such as "Wicklow Hills," "Dalkey," "Dublin Bay" and "Lough Darg" among Mitchell's small and medium-sized canvases, paperworks and monoprints leave no doubt of her show's Irish theme and focus. Bold color patterns such as pastoral greens, oceanic blues, granite grays and haystack yellows play off each other among the pieces in two- and three-panel designs oddly similar to Web site frame sets.

But everything here is organically based in subject and strictly handmade. The artist describes that everything is covert in the pieces' imaginary landscapes bordering greens and haystacks, fields and stonework, water and land and nearly every other combination of these elements.

"Ireland as a land is very verdant," said Mitchell. "There are lots of greens, very lush and almost tropical, amidst the blues of nearby water or the grays of granite from old, abandoned buildings. Most of these places are very solitary now, but you get a strong sense of history being there, that people have been there before and lived and died in dramatic ways."



Muriel Mitchell will exhibit her works at the Sparrow House Museum, 42 Summer Street in Plymouth through Aug. 30. For more information call (508) 747-1240.

Reminiscing with the Little River Band

Reinvented group takes stage Saturday at Memorial Hall

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Wayne Nelson, lead vocalist and bassist for the Little River Band, would like fans to know that LRB is still the Real Thing.

This despite the fact that the Australian-bred quintet is long past its late 1970s/early 80s hit making heyday and the current incarnation of LRB contains none of the original members who launched the band in the Down Under clubs of Melbourne in 1975.

But Nelson and current lead guitarist Stephen Housden are genuine, if not wholly original, River Band alumni from that prime era of two decades back, thus the two are the longest-running members in a band history that has seen its fair share of personnel reshuffling. Nelson notes that he and his bandmate aren't the only authentic ties to LRB as we know them.

The Little River Band will get a chance to prove its continuing genuineness to local fans onstage when the band appears in concert at Plymouth Memorial Hall this Saturday at 7:30 p.m. Opening the show are the South Shore's own pop/oldies a cappella "harmony-masters" Avenue X.

For the record, the nucleus of LRB's essential founding lineup was main songwriter and guitarist Graham Goble and lead vocalist Glenn Shurrock, whose velvety Aussie tenor is heard on such 70s hits as "Happy Anniversary," "Help Is On the Way," "Reminiscing" and "Cool Change." But after Nelson joined the band in 1979,

Ronan Tynan is Renaissance man

Irish Tenor sings at Music Circus Saturday

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

As one of the world-famous Irish Tenors, Ronan Tynan is known for his stirring performances.

What may be less well-known, however, than his beautiful singing voice is that Tynan — who appears in concert this Saturday at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset — has beaten tremendous odds to achieve his professional success.

From his childhood in Kilkenny, Ireland, to his present day status as a respected physician and entertainer, Tenor Tynan has faced, head on, seemingly insurmountable obstacles and triumphantly overcome them. Tynan, a twin, whose brother died at the age of 11 months, was afflicted with lower leg problems in his early years. After an accident, his lower limbs were amputated when he was just 20 years old.

Within 12 months, Tynan began winning medals at disabled games. Between 1981 and 1990, he amassed 18 gold medals and 14 world records in international track and field events. He then went on to become the first disabled person ever admitted to the National College of Physical Education in Limerick. That was followed by training in medicine at Trinity College, Dublin, leading to his current position as a doctor of sports medicine.

When Tynan turned 30, he started taking voice lessons and, again, his natural talent emerged. In 1992, he won the John McCormack Cup for Tenor Voice which helped lead to master classes with the famous Italian tenor, Ugo Benelli, in Genoa. While studying as a medical student in 1994, he rose to stardom after winning the BBC talent competition "Go For It," securing maximum points from the judging panel in the final.

In 1996, Tynan won the prestigious "Marmande" singing competition in France and was invited to be part of the famous Pavarotti School. His rapid rise to prominence led to Sony Music offering him a recording contract. His first Album, My Life Belongs to You, was released in August 1998 and jumped straight into the charts at number five and was certified gold.

Irish Tenor Ronan Tynan performs at The South Shore Music Circus Aug. 23.

As if medicine and music were not already enough, Tynan added to his list of achievements by authoring his first book. In January 2002, Simon & Schuster released his memoir, Halfway Home: My Life 'Til Now.

(Ronan Tynan will perform at the South Shore Music Circus, Sohier Street, Cohasset, on Saturday, August 23. Tickets may be purchased in person at the SSMC box-office or by calling 617/931-2787. For more information, visit www.musiccircus.com.)

The tea favored at covered dish suppers in our small town in Vermont is inevitably made from a powdered mix and is served up in a gigantic coffee urn. It is sweet enough to make your teeth ache and the flavor of the tea itself is mostly absent. I wanted to start with a good basic recipe for iced tea but then add a bit of subtle flavoring, to transform this plain Jane of a beverage into something with more pizzazz.

First, I went back to take a fresh look at how to make iced tea. Unfortunately, most tap water does add an unpleasant flavor, so either good well water, filtered water, or bottled water is recommended. Iced tea is usually made from black tea (as opposed to white, green or oolong). Grocery stores are packed with countless brands and blends but I prefer a full-bodied tea such as Assam or Darjeeling. For purposes of this recipe, however, I limited myself to bagged grocery-store tea, the type most folks have in their cupboards. I preferred tea made with water that was just off the boiling point since it produced no harshness or medicinal taste and I wanted the tea to be as strong as possible without turning the corner to bitter. For black tea the limit was 4 minutes. (For hot tea using a premium leaf, most experts would put the proper time in the 2 fi- to 3- minute range.) If you are not sure about the timing, you should taste the tea at one-minute intervals. I decided to make the iced tea in quart batches and used five tea bags. I put the water in a nonreactive saucepan and set it over high heat. Once it boiled, I removed it from the heat source and waited 30 seconds, adding the teabags and letting them steep for 4 minutes. I then removed the bags and poured the tea into another container for speedy cooling. This method produced clear, clean-tasting, full-bodied tea every time. When kept overnight in the refrigerator, the flavor was compromised, so make the tea on the day you wish to serve it.

To sweeten the quart of iced tea, I added 1/4-cup of sugar. Be sure to add the sugar while the tea is still warm — it will dissolve much more quickly in warm rather than cold tea. Honey obscured the flavor of the tea. However, an infusion of fruit flavor did work well. For each quart of tea I took half a lemon thinly sliced and the 1/4-cup of sugar. Using a potato masher or a wooden spoon I mashed the slices into the sugar until the sugar was dissolved and the lemon exuded oils and juice resulting in thick, intensely flavored syrup. To this, I added the still- warm tea and steeped the mixture for 15 minutes. For orange-flavored tea I substituted an orange for the half lemon. Other fruits, including lime, were not successful.

Next, I moved onto tea with fruit juice. My first and most obvious addition was lemonade. (If you purchase store-bought lemonade, Odwalla is pretty good.) I found for each cup of tea about 1/4 cup of lemonade worked well when added to the sweetened tea or the orange-infused tea. (Don't add lemonade to lemon-infused tea.) Two other juices that worked well were white cranberry juice and peach nectar. I don't recommend blending the juice and tea ahead of time. They don't keep well — the tea becomes cloudy and the flavors get muddy.

REALLY GOOD ICED TEA

For fresh tasting iced tea plan to serve it the same day.

1 quart spring or filtered water

5 tea bags of your choice (black tea such as Darjeeling or Assam preferred)

1/4 cup granulated sugar

Place the water in a nonreactive saucepan over high heat. Bring to a boil, remove from heat and wait 30 seconds. Place the teabags in the water and steep (covered) for 3 to 5 minutes depending on the tea and your personal preference. (Taste every minute starting at 2 minutes.) Remove tea bags and stir in the sugar until dissolved. Transfer to a pitcher or carafe and cool until room temperature before serving. Serve in tall, ice-filled glasses with a lemon slice or mint sprig.

Makes 1 quart.

LEMON-INFUSED ICED TEA

Omit the sugar from the above recipe. Thinly slice 1/2 lemon and place in a medium bowl with /-cup sugar. Using a potato masher or wooden spoon, crush the fruit and sugar together until the sugar is dissolved and you have a puddle of syrup at the bottom of the bowl. Pour the hot tea over the lemon/sugar mixture and let sit for 15 minutes. Strain and cool to room temperature before serving.

Reminiscing with the Little River Band

he soon began sharing the lead-vocal spotlight with Shurrock, dueting with the LRB frontman on another hit, "Take It Easy On Me," and taking the lead all the way on the later River Band chartbuster, 1981's "Night Owls."

"We've actually always had three or four members singing lead with the Little River Band for as long as I've been with them," said Nelson by phone from Minnesota. "That includes the days with Glenn (Shurrock), both before he left for a solo career and then came back in the 80s. All of the original members of LRB, in fact, have quit at least once. Stephen (Housden) and I have now been in the band for 23 years and all the other current members five years. The ironic thing is this current lineup, with no original members, is the most stable LRB lineup ever."

What also might be ironic is that Nelson is the only American in what has otherwise been a perennially Aussie-membered band. But musically, LRB has always leaned toward America, blending Eagles-like, country-rock vocal harmonies with Allman Brothers-derived dual guitar leads along with a number of other Stateside rock and pop influences. Naturally, this style went over big in the U.S. as LRB notched ten Top Ten hits on the American charts from 1977 to '85.

All of the original members of LRB, in fact, have quit at least once. Stephen (Housden) and I have now been in the band for 23 years and all the other current members five years. The ironic thing is this current lineup, with no original members, is the most stable LRB lineup ever."

Little River Band vocalist Wayne Nelson

Nelson was raised in Illinois but "grew up musically in Chicago." He first met LRB just before joining the band in 1979, when he was playing in the Jim Messina Band and the two groups crossed paths on tour in Chicago. LRB, said the singer/bassist, "was looking for a bass player who could sing."

Along with his own original vocal spots, Nelson is handling the lead on most of the other LRB hits, thereby stepping into the shoes of former lead voice Shurrock. And with those smooth harmonies and doubled-up guitar lines still intact, Nelson assures fans that the current River Band — also including guitarist Greg Hind, keyboardist Glenn Reither and drummer Kevin Murphy — is no imitation.

"Stephen and I are very conscientious of making sure the band remains authentic and that our sound maintains its integrity," Nelson said. "All of our members essentially grew up listening to and playing LRB songs and know the music well. So people who come to our shows hear the songs and the band they way they remember. Not to take anything away from Glenn (Shurrock) or Graham (Goble), of course, because they're the ones who created LRB and are part of the band's heritage. But on tour with this current band, fans have been coming to us after nearly every show and telling us 'you sound better than ever.'"

The Little River Band plays Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street, Saturday, Aug. 23 at 7:30 p.m. For tickets and information call 866-468-7619 or visit www.ticketweb.com.

Colorful blooms for the late summer landscape

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the month of August progresses, many landscapes lose their appeal with fewer blooms to add color to our perennial borders and foundation plantings. Although this year's bloom season continues to lag behind, extending the flowering of many midseason star performers, there has been a noticeable ebb in my garden this past week as many perennial blossoms begin to fade. During more typical growing seasons, plantings of annuals usually offer colorful continuity, reaching their maximum impact during August and September, but this summer's perpetual dampness and relative lack of warmth and sunshine has taken its toll on some of these multicolored additions. A panorama of primarily monochromatic green foliage has resulted for many landscapes, although this is admittedly a welcome change from the basic beige palette we endured during last year's drought.

There are many attractive trees and shrubs that offer glorious color for the late summer and fall landscape. Unfortunately, many of these plants are overlooked at our nurseries during the spring planting season and once they come into bloom they are often difficult to find. Notable woody plants that reach peak color by summer's end include the butterfly bushes (Buddleia), mallows and Rose-of-Sharon (Hibiscus spp.), sweet pepperbush (Clethra), blue mist shrub (Caryopteris) and a variety of hydrangeas.

Butterfly bushes, appropriately nicknamed summer lilacs, are available in a wide range of flower colors including pink, lavender, blue, purple and white. Irresistible to butterflies, hummingbirds and the fascinating hummingbird moth, they tolerate a wide range of soil and light conditions, blooming prolifically from late July until frost. Remove spent flowers to encourage side shoots to bloom. As they bloom on new wood, these shrubs should be pruned drastically in early spring to a foot or two in height to promote denser growth and more flowers and to help keep them a manageable size. During this particularly harsh winter, some of these shrubs succumbed or died to the ground, but many sprouted new growth from the base and are covered with fragrant blooms in recent weeks.

Few plants rival the showy blooms of the flamboyant rose mallow (Hibiscus moscheutos). Perhaps more correctly categorized as a woody-based perennial rather than a shrub, established clumps produce woody canes 5-feet high by 5-feet wide. Broad, circular blooms may reach dramatic proportions of up to 10 inches across in shades of pink, red and white, many of which display a contrasting red eye. Provide these tropical-looking plants a moisture-retentive, well-drained soil in full sun to which lime has been added for a more neutral pH. Patience is required each spring as new growth rarely appears until late May or early June from the base of the plant. Old canes will not produce flowers or foliage in subsequent years and can be cut down in autumn but are sometimes best left until spring to mark the plant's location.

The hardy Rose-of-Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus) provides weeks of nonstop blooms when few other trees or shrubs are flowering. Rose-of-Sharon has been grown since colonial times and like its cousin, the mallow, it is late to break dormancy in the spring. Flowers may be single or double in shades of pink, red, white, red, purple or blue. Many selections exhibit contrasting-colored eyes. Each flower lasts only a day, but an established shrub will continue to produce innumerable elegant blooms from late July until frost. The colorful blossoms are irresistible to hummingbirds.

Reaching a height of up to 15 feet at maturity, Rose-of-Sharon are available as multi-stemmed shrubs or may be trained to produce a small tree and will readily adapt to a wide range of growing conditions including part shade, city pollution, and seashore environments. Spring pruning is preferable as plants bloom on new wood. Moisture-retentive soils should be provided, particularly for the double-flowering forms.

One of our loveliest, late-blooming native shrubs is the sweet pepperbush which can be found growing in moist woodlands or wetland habitats. This underused shrub exhibits handsome, glossy, deep green leaves and produces 6-inch spikes of feathery white or pink flowers. Deliciously fragrant, the blossoms entice hummingbirds and butterflies. Although these attractive shrubs thrive in moist, partial shade, they are adaptable to a wide range of growing conditions. They reach a mature size of eight feet, expanding yearly by suckers and appreciate renewal pruning to remove older shoots in early spring. Several lovely cultivars are available. 'C. 'Hummingbird' is a compact grower reaching a height of only four feet with a multitude of white spires; pink-flowering varieties include 'Pink Spires' and 'Ruby Spice'.

The blue mist shrub (Caryopteris) has been a personal favorite since my mother introduced it to me more than 20 years ago. This compact, 3-foot shrub has survived, thrived and seeded itself around my garden for years, although it may succumb in a particularly harsh winter. An ideal specimen for a mixed perennial or shrub border, it displays silvery gray, aromatic foliage highlighted by clusters of delicate, fluffy blue flowers in late summer and early autumn. Best grown in well-drained soils in full sun to light shade, pruning should be performed in early spring as these shrubs bloom on new wood. Cultivars that are currently offered at our local nurseries include 'Dark Knight' and 'Longwood Blue', both of which exhibit particularly deep blue flowers, and 'Worcester Gold', which provides soft, yellow-green foliage and lavender-blue flowers.

Visit your local nurseries and add one or more of these great late-summer bloomers to your landscape for years of colorful flowers.

LISTEN To Life

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

THE FIRST STEP

For many people, the first step in successfully addressing a hearing loss involves admitting that one exists. All too often, the process of recognizing a hearing loss is made difficult by the fact that symptoms develop so gradually. Thus, people are encouraged to seek a hearing evaluation if they have trouble understanding conversation. Difficulty hearing the television at normal volume may also be indicative of a problem, as may difficulties hearing a person calling you from behind or from another room. One of the most deleterious effects of hearing loss is that it impairs one's social life and fosters a sense of isolation. If you are tempted to avoid social gatherings due to impaired hearing, have your hearing evaluated.

If you've tried just about everything to deal with your hearing impairment on your own - turning up the volume, avoiding conversation, shouting, withdrawing from social situations, lip reading - now try a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist. At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we have advanced training to understand and diagnose your loss, state-of-the-art equipment to test your hearing, and the very latest in hearing instruments. Call us at 781-337-1144 to schedule a comprehensive hearing evaluation at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth.

P.S. If you frequently ask friends to repeat themselves or to speak up, you may be suffering from a hearing loss.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WED., AUGUST 20

The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 12:29 a.m. until 3:41 a.m., when it enters Gemini. The Gemini moon forms challenging 90-degree contacts to Uranus in the morning and Mars in the evening. It may be difficult to get a lot accomplished today. If you are working, handle a variety of projects, tie up loose ends. Stay alert and use common sense. On the other hand, influences rate high for socializing and vacationing. Be sure to take extra time out for fun and games.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 21

Venus and Jupiter conjoin at 6:23 a.m., and the sun prepares to align with Jupiter, generating an upbeat, social mood. The moon continues to travel in loquacious Gemini. However, there is one pitfall in today's planetary picture, in effect between 12:29-3:29 p.m., when the moon and Pluto oppose. Choose your words carefully. Careless or indiscreet remarks may come back to haunt you. Fortunately, this influence passes over quickly and the remainder of the day rates high for relaxing and enjoying life.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 22

Yesterday's planetary influences affect this morning as well. The alignment of the sun and Jupiter culminates at 6:08 a.m., and the moon continues active travel in Gemini until 2:15 p.m. Go with your adventurous side, be more spontaneous. If you are working, you can make progress developing projects that need support or input from others. Venus enters Virgo at 7:36 a.m., remaining there until September 15. The moon enters Cancer at 3:44 p.m. and aligns with Venus and Uranus. In addition, a polarity of Venus and Uranus may spark romantic passions this evening.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 23

The moon travels in Cancer this weekend, making it prime for family get-togethers. This is also a perfect time for tackling projects in and around your home. A lunar alignment to Saturn this morning urges you to follow through on promises you have made to others. The sun enters Virgo at 9:08 a.m., and prepares to oppose Uranus. Its influence warns you to avoid making rigid plans. Expect the unexpected; go with the flow of things.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 24

This is a wonderful day to relax and spend quality time with loved ones. A polarity of the sun and Uranus occurs this morning, prompting you to do something different. Step out of your usual routine and be open to new experiences. The moon continues to travel in family-oriented Cancer, and becomes inactive at 4:51 p.m., when it aligns with Mercury.

MONDAY, AUGUST 25

The moon enters Leo at 12:48 a.m., generating an upbeat, easygoing mood. However, as this week progresses, planetary action becomes more intense and challenging. Tackle projects you've been putting off and get them out of the way now. A lunar polarity to Neptune makes this an evening to mellow out completely.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 26

The Leo moon aligns with Pluto at 8:00 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. A new moon will culminate tomorrow. Plan to finish old business and handle routine chores today. A polarity of Venus and Mars prompts you to seek a creative or romantic outlet for your energies this evening.

WED., AUGUST 27

A barrage of planetary activity occurs during the next few days. Today the giant planet Jupiter enters Virgo at 5:27 a.m., remaining there until September 2004. In addition, Jupiter prepares to oppose Uranus, making this a period when unexpected opportunities or obstacles may suddenly surface. The moon enters Virgo at 6:27 a.m. and interacts with Jupiter and Uranus this morning. At 1:26 p.m. the sun and moon align at 4-degrees Virgo, and the new moon culminates. A lunar opposition to Mars at 3:35 p.m. warns you to slow down and use extra caution when driving or operating machinery.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 28

Be sure to start this day with a peaceful, positive attitude. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain perspective. The moon travels in Virgo all day. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, begins retrograde travel at 9:42 a.m. Mercury will travel in retrograde motion until September 20, bringing a period to focus on inner, personal growth rather than your external, professional life. A polarity of the sun and Mars warns against taking risks or acting on impulse. The planet Pluto, standing at 17-degrees of Sagittarius, turns direct at 11:34 p.m.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 29

The Virgo moon aligns with Mercury at 3:26 a.m. and becomes inactive. A Libra moon takes over at 9:41 a.m., bringing a focus on key relationships. Although this is not a time to begin new partnerships, it is ideal for repairing and rebuilding relationships that have broken down. Be willing to forgive and forget past hurts. Open your heart to higher visions.

Water board: Avalon septic system stinks

Level of design detail is at issue

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

AvalonBay knows how it wants to dispose of the estimated 40,000 gallons per day of wastewater generated by the 200 apartments it plans to build, but it's not clear if those preliminary plans are sufficient for the Zoning Board of Appeals to issue the controversial project a comprehensive permit.

The Water Commission is adamant the ZBA doesn't have enough detail on how the on-site treatment system would work and has urged the board to deny the permit. The Water Commission is taking a zero-tolerance stance on the issue because the Avalon site, which is on the west side of Route 3A, ultimately drains to Lily Pond, the town's drinking water supply.

"We're saying it's location, location,

3 Jerusalem Lane is still a lofty topic

Permit conditions include review of height calculations

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

No one can argue the Zoning Board of Appeals decision on what to do about 3 Jerusalem Lane is a tall issue.

Case in point is the ZBA decision to issue a special permit this week that essentially says the house that about triples the size of its predecessor on the small cul de sac off Jerusalem Road is OK. But whether the decision voted Monday — saying the house is a conforming structure on a non-conforming lot — will pass muster with homeowner Phil Ayer may turn on how the ZBA

Cohasset's own 'Millennium Girl'

Amanda Thompson to hold book signing

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Sitting in her living room, a kitten in her lap and a completed manuscript on the coffee table, Amanda Thompson can breathe a sigh of relief knowing her first novel is off to be printed and a book signing has already been scheduled.

But promotional appearances will have to be limited to weekends, as the 14-year-old author will begin ninth grade at Cohasset Middle High School with the rest of her classmates next week.

"I'm already working on the sequel," said Amanda, who will have to try to fit in writing between homework and her piano and guitar lessons — not to mention hanging out with friends.

But even though Amanda, who is starting her career so young, has time on her side — she's a girl who sets a goal and gets it done.

In the winter of 2000, when Amanda was in the sixth grade, she set out to write "Millennium Girl," knowing only she wanted

School bells will ring on Wednesday, Sept. 3

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"There is always an excitement in the air this time of year."
— Janet Sheehan, Osgood principal

After months of fun in the sun, students will trade in their beach bags for backpacks as Sept. 3 marks the first day of school.

For the little ones just heading off to school for the first time, kindergarten orientation will be held at the Osgood School Sept. 3 and Sept. 4. Students and parents will be invited to meet in small groups to spend an hour in their new classroom to meet their new teacher and classmates. Parents have been notified of their orientation day and time.

Osgood Principal, Janet Sheehan said she is "absolutely" looking forward to this school year.

"There is always an excitement in the air this time of year," she said.

For students in grades one through three, school begins Sept. 3 at 9:05 a.m. Bus students will arrive between 8:55 a.m. and 9:05 a.m. and the school asks that parents who will drive their children not drop them off before 8:55 a.m. as there is no supervision available until then. School will end at 3:05 p.m.

Kindergarten hours will be 9:05-11:50 a.m. for the morning session and 12:20 to 3:05 p.m. for the afternoon session.

For students buying lunch, hot and cold meals are available for $2.25. Milk may be purchased for children bringing lunch for 40 cents. A prepaid meals ticket program is also available.

Sheehan said she is very excited about the two new third grade teachers hired this year. She said that Emily Fortin and Kathleen Hepp both came to

School board seat draws interest

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

So far three citizens have formally expressed interest in letters to Selectmen or the School Committee in filling the School Committee seat vacated by Jane Pescatore, who stepped down earlier this month to accept a position at middle-high school secretary.

Former School Committee member Betsy Connolly, 1 Lily Pond Lane, said she would be interested in being a member of the school board for the remainder of this year and for the following year, if elected.

Connolly, who has been in the education field for 30 years, is employed by the Hingham Public Schools. She was elected to fill the remaining year of former school board member Joe McElroy's unexpired term in 1999. She did not seek reelection the following year due to a possible conflict of interest.

Scott F. O'Grady, 115 Sohier St., who has three children enrolled in schools (one each at Osgood, Deer Hill and the middle-high school) stated he is therefore "particularly motivated to offer my best efforts in support of our school system, to ensure every child in Cohasset receives the best possible education."

O'Grady, who is currently working on his master's degree, has worked as an English teacher in the Weymouth and Plymouth public schools.

Rory Winters, 107 Forest Ave., has also thrown her hat into the ring. A life-long Cohasset resident and a product of the Cohasset school system, Winters feels she would have excellent insight into School Committee matters.

Lobster boat will float again

Bob Figueiredo makes repairs on his boat after a rock punctured holes in the hull last week.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Sitting in the driveway among lobster traps and buoys, Bob Figueiredo's lobster boat, "the Margie," has returned to land to get some repairs after an accident punctured the hull of the boat last week.

Figueiredo, 73, and a third generation lobsterman, was out near Minot's Light when his boat hit a rock usually covered even at the lowest tide.

"My father knows [that area] better than anyone," said Figueiredo's son Paul, who is also a lobsterman and dropped everything to come help his father when he heard the call to the harbormaster on his radio. He also said 10 other lobster boats were on the scene within 10 minutes.

"They can all hear it," said Bob's wife Margaret who said all the boats have radios and can keep tabs on each other. She said when she and Bob were first married, Bob's father would be out on the ocean and the two used to call each other if anything ever went wrong.

Because the Margie was towed to shallow water after the accident in order to minimize water damage and make repairs easier when the tide is low, they had to wait until the tide was just right again to try to lift her out of the water.

"A lot of people don't realize the work they have to do," said Margaret, who added that Bob and some helpers worked from 10 o'clock Tuesday night until 4:30 Wednesday morning to keep the boat from sustaining more damage. "It takes a lot of people and it takes a lot of work," she said.

The Margie needed some help getting back to the harbor, so Paul and a friend of the Figueiredo's tied her to their boats to help keep her afloat. Once in the harbor, the Margie was lifted up by a crane, water draining out her hull all the while.

Once the boat was lifted out, she had to be lifted again once the truck and trailer arrived to take her to the Figueiredos' home on Pond Street.

"It was really something to see," said Margaret, who was there when the boat was lifted out of the water.

Currently, Bob and many helpers have been working on repairs to the boat, and a friend, Bob Butman Sr., has been helping on the engine.

"I'll have the engine going this week," Butman said.

While progress will depend on many factors, including the weather, the Figueiredos hope to have the Margie back in the water in a few weeks.

Open seat on School Committee

Applications for the open seat on the School Committee are being accepted both at both the superintendent's and selectmen' offices until Sept. 15. The position became available when Jane Pescatore resigned to accept the position as secretary to CMHS Principal Mike Jones.

Pescatore's replacement will be appointed in a joint meeting by both the Board of Selectmen and School Committee. Whoever is appointed will serve until the April Town Election. This spring, there will be three school committee positions up for grabs, two for three-year terms and one to fill the remaining year of Pescatore's term.

Interested candidates should forward a letter stating why they would like to fill the position, to the Chairman of the School Committee Rick Flynn via Superintendent Edward Malvey, or the Board of Selectmen via Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Drug testing for bus drivers

Cohasset schools are reviewing the state policies regarding random drug testing of bus drivers for the public schools. While there have been no incidents regarding drivers under the influence, Business Manager Ivan Klimko, who has been very involved with the school busing program said, "It's the right thing to do," and a necessary action because of liability issues.

Supt. Edward Malvey said busing coordinator Peggy Litchfield has been reviewing the process at the state level and will make arrangements to begin a testing program.

Currently, the town has six drivers, five of which drive school buses and one for the special needs van.

Senior citizens at school lunches

Members of the School Committee have discussed the possibility of starting a program at the middle-high school that would invite Senior Citizens from the community to have lunch at the school. Supt. Edward Malvey said there have been successful programs at the other schools, including a reading program at Osgood, where seniors come into the classroom and read to the children. The program is only an idea at this point, but would provide an opportunity for various age groups of the community to mingle with each other, he said.

Builds rapport as kids learn the ropes

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A handful of Cohasset High School students are getting a first-hand look at the job of being a police officer.

The CPD is offering the town's first "Student Police Academy" and mid-way through the five-week course, both students and police are giving the course high marks.

"It's certainly refreshing to see teenagers wanting to get more actively involved with the department," Police Chief Robert Jackson said. "And it's a good opportunity for use to build a bridge with the young people in the community."

Last week, participants — who all had signed parental permission slips — had the chance to learn about firearm safety at the Scituate Rod and Gun Club, under the close eye of police firearm instructors, officers Rick Grassie and Christy Tarantino.

Sgt. William Quigley, who worked with then CHS junior Erik Belz to develop the course, hopes a little awareness can go a long way.

"What we're trying to do is make kids aware if they ever find a gun or come in contact with a gun, how to handle it so no one gets hurt," said Quigley, adding participants also received an overview of the gun laws.

In addition to firearm safety, the course includes overviews of patrol procedures, search and seizure, makeup and organization of the police department, and crime scene investigation. Students, who had their parents' permission, were also invited on ride-alongs.

The course had its roots in CHS teacher Jack Buckley's "Street Law" class last spring during when Quigley gave a 90-minute presentation on criminal law and what it's like to be a police officer. The course was a big success, prompting Belz — who couldn't fit the street law class in due to his schedule — to contact Quigley via the department's web site about starting a student police academy.

Quigley and Belz worked together adapting the syllabus from the Hingham Student Police Academy to fit Cohasset.

The course is intended to be a two-way educational experience enhancing and promoting the relationship between young adults and the CPD – resulting in a better understanding, Quigley said. The relationship between Cohasset youth and local police officers has at times been strained especially in the summer months when partying teens are arrested for underage drinking.

About 90 percent of the officers' time to teach the course was donated, Quigley said, while others were "on shift while participating in the Student Police Academy. The police department covered the cost of photocopies for class materials and ammunition for the firing range. The library provided the classroom free of charge.

Twelve students are participating in the course, which has an equal number of boys and girls enrolled and meets on Monday night for five weeks.

"It will be really interesting to see what the kids have to say – what their perceptions were when they started and what those will be when it's all over," Quigley said.

From the police perspective, Quigley said "it's been nice to get to know some of the kids by their first names and not to know them through some type of infraction."

He said the students have gotten to know some of the department's younger officers and they've realized the officers are not any different from them.

"I'm not sure they appreciated that before," he said. "Some people don't realize under that uniform is a person."

Belz said the class has lived up to his expectations.

"It's a really good class and gives you a lot of insight into the lives of police officers," he said, adding seeing his fellow students' response to the class has been very rewarding.

Belz's sister Aly, a junior, is also enrolled.

"I've learned a lot and had no clue what a police officer did," she said.

Students receive an official CPD T-shirt and a certificate of completion after finishing the course.

Erik Belz checks out one of the bullet-proof vests that police officers wear, as Andrew Musto (center) and Malcolm Stansell listen intently to the officers during a field trip to the Scituate Rod and Gun Club.

Schools to provide lunches in-house

Private service ran at a deficit

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"We believe we're going to have savings by not having some of the overhead of private management companies."
— Supt. Edward Malvey

In an effort to help balance the books, Cohasset schools will implement a new in-house food service program as well as raise lunch prices this fall.

For the last 15 years, the schools have relied on Chartwells Educational Dining Services, a company that provides food service to more than 500 school districts in the United States, serving over 1.5 million meals daily.

When the Chartwells contract expired, Supt. Edward Malvey had to make the decision of whether to keep the company for another year and possibly risk losing more money, or seek other alternatives.

"We need to try something different," Malvey said, adding that right now, "money is tight," and from a business standpoint, he can't justify keeping the service in the schools when it has consistently lost money over the years, even though the relationship between the two has always been a positive one.

According to Business Manager Ivan Klimko, the deficit for the school lunch fund is one that has spanned "many years with varied causes." He said the schools were advised by the town auditor to keep $10,000 in an account for a potential deficit. Because of delays to the opening of the Deer Hill cafeteria due to construction, expected food sales were cut way back, which led to a higher deficit than the budgeted money could handle. In addition to the $10,000 set aside for this purpose, the $4,000 profit from sales for the other schools and an additional $17,000 transfer from the general fund were needed to cover the cost.

This year, Malvey said he doesn't have the wiggle room to cover that kind of a deficit, should it happen again.

Klimko said the school lunch fund should be self-balancing, which is what Malvey hopes will happen with the new arrangement.

"We believe we're going to have savings by not having some of the overhead of private management companies," said Malvey, adding that any profits earned through school lunches could be turned back into the school's lunch fund.

But even with the change of bringing the service in-house, there will be many similarities. Cafeteria workers will continue to be employees of the school district. Bob Levy, who formerly worked for Chartwells and was Cohasset's Food Service Director through the company, will continue in the same role as an employee of the school department.

In addition to providing its own food service, the price of school lunches is going up. There will be an additional 10 cents charged to each lunch purchased this school year. Elementary school lunches will now be $2.25 and high school lunches will be $2.50. Teacher lunches will be $3.50.

In both the fall of 2001 and 2002, schools lunches went up by 15 cents.

In addition to the change in food service, School Committee Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts said the Board of Health has been actively pursuing getting healthier food choices into the schools, and said she "doesn't know if it will be an easier to do," with the service in-house. But she hopes the schools will take the lead on this project and start implementing changes right away.

Costly lunches in Cohasset

In relation to other area schools, Cohasset students pay more for their school lunches. Prices this year are $2.25 at the Deer Hill and Osgood schools and $2.50 at the middle-high school.

Scituate lunches are $1.75 for students and $2.50 for teachers after a recent price increase of 50 cents. That was the first price increase for Scituate schools in the last 15 years.

In the town of Norwell, students at the elementary and middle schools pay $1.75 while the high school students pay $2. Hingham charges $1.60 for elementary school lunches and $1.85 for lunch at the high school.

School board backs Malvey's decision on business manager

Says personal, professional matters should be separate

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The School Committee is in full support of Supt. Edward Malvey's decision to keep Business Manager Ivan Klimko on the payroll, after he pled guilty last month at Hingham District Court to charges of assault and battery on his wife in an incident that occurred last November.

Chairman Rick Flynn said the committee will continue to follow Malvey's lead and keep Klimko's business life separate from his personal life. Klimko has always "done a great job," on the business end, and in regards to the personal side, Flynn said, "certain things we're not privy to."

The school board's remarks were in response to a letter in the Aug. 21 Cohasset Mariner criticizing Malvey's decision to continue to employ Klimko.

Saying the school department should have zero tolerance for domestic abuse, Scott O'Grady, 115 Sohier St. stated he was outraged "at Superintendent Malvey's irresponsible decision to retain confessed wife beater Ivan Klimko in a position in the Cohasset Public Schools."

Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts referred to the letter at last Thursday's School Committee meeting after which the board members each publicly stated their support of Malvey's decision.

"I do support the Superintendent's decision," said Tebbetts, noting the issue is very complex. "There are never any simple decisions," she said, but added she thinks the correct decision was made.

Member Mark DeGiacomo said he was "in full support" of Malvey's decision as well.

Committee member Pat Martin, who was not present at the meeting, has been recused from all discussion regarding the Klimko case because of her position as a domestic violence intervention specialist at Wellspring in Hull.

Jane Pescatore recently resigned from the School Committee to accept a position as school secretary at the middle-high school.

Malvey said he sought legal counsel regarding the matter and did not elaborate on the specifics of those discussions.

"When your school attorney gives you advice, you should take it," he said.

Klimko, who was initially charged with attempted murder, was placed on an administrative leave without pay for a period of time, but resumed his duties at the school department when that charge was dropped due to insufficient evidence.

At court proceedings last month, Klimko, who has worked for the school system for more than two years, was sentenced to two and a half years of supervised probation. He is also required to participate in a batterer's program.

South Shore Charter School moving from Hull to Norwell

By Justin Graeber
CORRESPONDENT

"We've outgrown Hull."
— Michael Munhall, South Shore Charter School.

On Tuesday morning, the State Board of Education voted to approve the South Shore Charter School's request to relocate their facilities from Hull to 100 Longwater Circle in Norwell. The proposed move has been subject of controversy, provoking responses from the Norwell School Department as well as officials from Marshfield.

The South Shore Charter School has been located in Hull for the last nine years. For that time, the school was spread over several buildings — a former bank, a former hotel, and a former aquarium.

"We've outgrown Hull," Michael Munhall, said Executive Director for South Shore Charter School. The school's board of trustees has been looking for an alternative location for the school since its inception. The timetable for the move is to have the high school student move in this fall, and the rest of the school will follow next year.

In a letter to the Massachusetts Department of Education, Munhall outlined the school's reasons for relocating. The school is losing its lease on the high school building in Hull to a municipal redevelopment project. Having students of all ages working together, one of the school's goals, has never been completely achieved due to the space between the current buildings. Also, the current Hull location is not central to the school's 22 sending communities, and the Norwell location would cut down on transportation time for parents. The school services an area from Boston to Plymouth, and from Brockton to Hull.

Norwell School Superintendent Dr. Donald Beaudette, who was present at Tuesday's meeting, had several objections to the move, which he and the Norwell School Committee put in writing to the Board of Education. He cited the fact that Norwell receives $8,000 in state aid for each student that attends the public school system. If 10 students from Norwell decided to attend the school, it could result in the loss of $80,000 for Norwell.

"That's two teachers," Beaudette said, "and 10 kids from all grade levels aren't going to make our class sizes go down."

In addition, selling the Longwater property, which is located in the Assinippi Industrial Park that runs adjacent to Route 3 South, to a non-profit agency could result in $80,000 in lost property taxes for the town, $44,000 directly to the schools.

"We would either have to reduce the budget or raise taxes to make up the difference," Beaudette said

He also said that while he supports the idea of charter schools and the people who run them, moving the facility to Norwell would be contrary to the school's ideals.

"It's supposed to provide an alternative in areas with low-performing schools," Beaudette said, noting that South Shore Charter School students have not performed well on the MCAS exam.

"What can the charter schools offer that the other schools [Norwell, Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham] cannot?" he asked.

Beaudette also believes that the charter school has "grossly underestimated the cost of renovation" at the Longwater facility. South Shore gave an estimate of $2 million to refurbish the building for educational purposes. The former occupant was the corporate headquarters of a pharmaceutical company. He cited the example of a recent office building outfitted for school use by the North River Education Collaborative. The estimate for that job was $85 a square foot, nearly twice the estimate being offered by South Shore Charter School.

Marshfield Selectman Michael Maresco also co-authored a written response to the charter school's relocation proposal.

"It's important to let the state know what the concerns of cities and towns are," he said. He said that unlike cities and towns, charter schools are not required to provide education to children with discipline problem, or special education students.

"They just look to take the cream of the crop," he said. "It's not really a level playing field."

Munhall praised the Longwater facility as being an improvement of "light years" over the current buildings. He said the goal of the school was to find a building that needed "minimal work," citing classrooms and safety as the top priority. "Adding all the bells and whistles will take time," he said.

In terms of funding, Munhall pointed out that until it fell under the budget knife last year, there was a subsidy for towns that sent students to the charter school.

"The towns were getting paid to not educate," he said. However, he did admit that the way the schools are funded can be problematic.

"I understand that's a problem," he said. "The state does need to address it in some fashion."

He also noted that SSCS pays the rent on its buildings out of its per pupil funds, while cities and towns that own their buildings only pay the maintenance costs.

Munhall is not concerned about the school losing its core base of students from Hull in the move. There are 179 students that came from Hull last year, with the next highest being 36 from Weymouth.

"We don't anticipate any groups jumping ship," Munhall said. "We've received no negative feedback [from Hull families]."

The letter to the Department of Education included several letter of endorsement from parents of South Shore Charter School students.

"SSCS offers an academically challenging and culturally enriching experience for its students," wrote David Kellem of Hull. "Our children have thrived there...The new location will allow the school to become even better."

Much of the debate is now moot, since the move was approved by the state.

Water board says Avalon septic system stinks location," said attorney Paul DeRensis, who is serving as counsel for the Water Commission. "Look at this site – our motive is to protect the water supply. This is the wrong location. There is too much risk."

But Avalon's consultants say the comprehensive permit would be contingent on the project obtaining a ground-water discharge permit from the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), which would provide a tough review and protect the town. They say it is unreasonable for a developer to absorb the expense and go through all the time-consuming and detailed engineering required for final plans without having a permit in hand.

Avalon has also agreed to allow the town to conduct a "peer review" of the DEP process to insure its interests are protected.

The issue raised Monday is part of ongoing ZBA hearings with Avalon that is seeking a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law. Under 40B, developers can skirt a town's zoning regulations in exchange for providing some affordable housing. Twenty-five percent of Avalon's 200 units would be affordable. In the Avalon case, for example, a comprehensive permit would allow a high-density development on commercially zoned land.

Avalon hydrologist John J. Donohue of ENSR International conceded the next step of the process is a "a big step." However, he explained the key aspect of the treatment system is the "hydrology piece" which would be worked out in detail through the DEP process.

But Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said the town shouldn't leave it up to the DEP which uses a check-off list and doesn't necessarily do all its own analyses.

"I don't have too much confidence in the DEP in that regard," he said.

DeRensis said the town doesn't want to have its head on the chopping block.

"The town is being asked to put its head on the chopping block with a guillotine over it," he said. "They're saying the guillotine will be held with a thick rope.

"But our head is on the chopping block and if the engineering doesn't work, we all lose," DeRensis said.

Avalon attorney Steven Schwartz of the Boston law firm Goulston and Storrs said under 40B final plans do not have to be submitted before the comprehensive permit is issued. He explained case law is clear that only preliminary plans are required at this juncture.

Schwartz stressed, however, that the DEP has an "extremely rigorous process in place at the state level."

"It's not as if we're saying, 'trust us guys, issue your approval and you'll be fine.'"

The ZBA took the matter under advisement. The Avalon hearing will continue on Sept. 8, when the selectmen are expected to present their concerns. The ZBA said the hearing could wrap up on Sept. 8. If so, the hearing would finish almost exactly a year after it started on Sept. 16, 2002.

Cohasset's own 'Millennium Girl' pens her first novel her main character to be a "girl who moved," and she wanted to be published by the time she was 14 years old.

"I just shaved by," said Amanda, whose birthday was Aug. 27.

"I wanted her to have to go through a huge change," she said, and decided her main character Carolyn would move from Alaska to California to experience not only the change in climate, but culture as well.

After working on the story for a solid year, she finally came to her mother with what she thought was a publishable copy.

"When it was done, I realized she'd written a real novel," said Amanda's mother Sue, who added this was not the first time Amanda had started writing a novel, but the first time she had actually finished.

When Amanda decided getting the book published was something she really wanted to pursue, Sue was very supportive, but made sure Amanda knew getting published would take a lot of work and persistence. Amanda had do it mostly on her own.

"I wanted her to know how to do it for real," Sue said.

Amanda first set out to find an editor for her novel, and found one through Talcott Notch Literary Services. From there, Amanda sent her draft out to many different publishing houses, and received many positive responses, but unfortunately, none of the companies were willing to take on her book. Amanda describes the publishing process as a "Catch-22" situation, where it's almost impossible to get published without an agent, and even harder to get an agent if you haven't been published.

"I'm already working on the sequel."

— Amanda Thompson, 14

But after all the responses, Sue was even more convinced that Amanda's story was worth the effort. The publishing houses were all responding with personal notes saying how talented they thought Amanda was, and Sue said she remembers thinking, "she must have something here."

Amanda's book was eventually published by 1st Books Publishing, which is a company Amanda found on the Internet. As the title suggests, this company helps aspiring writers get their projects off the ground, which was exactly what Amanda needed.

Because Amanda chose 1st Books Publishing, her manuscript was available as an e-book first, meaning visitors were able to pay to download a digital copy of her book, before the hard copies were available.

Sue said the cost to have the book printed is comparable to what it would have cost to send Amanda to a summer writing course and "to me, it was so much more worthwhile," to have her daughter accomplish such a huge goal.

It's taken a lot of hard work and dedication, as well as years of practice for Amanda to get where she is today. At the age of four, she started reading and took up writing shortly after. With her little notebook attached to her belt, she was always ready to write, Sue said.

At the age of seven, Amanda read an issue of the Emerald Mirror, a bimonthly 16-page magazine featuring stories, puzzles, contests and information related to the Wizard of Oz, and decided to enter a piece of writing for one of its contests, and won. That story became her first piece of published fiction.

But being published isn't the only reward to writing well. After hearing from one of her teachers that a good essay on "Why I want a telescope" would be rewarded with a telescope, Amanda decided to give it a try. The telescope is currently positioned in her kitchen, pointed out the large glass doors, with the perfect placement to see Mars while it's close to Earth.

Along the way, Amanda has had not only the support of her family, but her friends as well. While going through the editing process, Amanda said she had one especially helpful friend to whom she dedicates her book.

The story of "Millennium Girl," tells the familiar agonizing tales of adolescence. The main character Carolyn is forced to move to an unfamiliar town, and has to make new friends. She struggles with bullies and first crushes, as well as finding the hidden talents of her true self.

Amanda will hold a book signing at Buttonwood Books and Toys on Rte. 3A in the Shaw's Plaza in Cohasset, Sept. 21 from 2-4 p.m., and at Storybook Cove at 2053 Washington St. in Hanover, Oct. 5 from 1:30-3:30 p.m.

Open school board seat draws interest

With education in political science and public administration and experience in city and state government, Winters says she would be an asset to the board.

"I believe that I can bring a young, fresh perspective to the Committee; a voice that represents residents who are dedicated to education and the town's youth — despite the fact they may not have children currently in the school system."

Adrienne MacCarthy, who is president of the PSO and a seven-year member of the School Facilities Committee, said she is also applying for Pescatore's seat. MacCarthy, who finished just two votes behind Pat Martin in a three-way race for two seats on the School Committee in April 2001, is in the process of writing her letter of interest.

"I believe I've demonstrated a commitment to the schools by working diligently on the School Facilities Committee," MacCarthy said in a telephone interview. "Also through the PSO, I've worked to fill needs of the schools.

"I've put my heart into helping the schools along."

At their Aug. 12 meeting, selectmen asked that all interested candidates notify them or the School Committee by letter.

Selectmen and the remaining members of the School Committee will meet in joint session at a date yet to be determined to vote to fill Pescatore's open seat until the April town election. At that time, the one-year remaining of Pescatore's term would be filled by whomever wins the seat at the ballot box.

The School Committee said last week it would accept letters from potential candidates until Sept. 15. The joint hearing with the School Committee and Board of Selectmen will be advertised at least a week in advance, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

3 Jerusalem Lane is still a lofty topic

says the height of the structure should be measured.

So while the ZBA decision to be filed with the Town Clerk this week ends a chapter in an ongoing saga that has pitted neighbors with Ayer – the book on the case is not closed.

For one thing, Ayer's appeal of the ZBA decision last January stating he needed a special permit is still in court with a hearing before a judge slated for late September.

"We're not giving up our position that we were not required to get a special permit in the first place," said Ayer's attorney, Roberta Sawyer. [Ayer, who had obtained a building permit, was ordered to stop work on the home – 80 percent complete at that point – when the ZBA agreed with the neighbors that Building Inspector Robert Egan had erred in issuing the building permit without Ayer first obtaining a special permit.]

Ayer also contends the ZBA has violated his civil rights by singling him out when it required him to obtain a special permit when other houses built under similar circumstances were not required to do so. But whether Ayer will pursue the civil rights issue has not been clearly determined, according to Sawyer.

And it's not clear if Ayer will accept the conditions of the special permit voted Monday that may include a new way of measuring height of the structure. The neighbors also have the right to appeal the ZBA's issuance of the special permit.

Sitting ZBA members on this precedent-setting case — Chairman Woody Chittick, Ben Lacy and Anson Whealler — hammered out changes in Chittick's draft decision Monday that included Ayer submitting a set of as-built plans and requiring a consultant be hired to ascertain all height, setback and lot coverage measurements. If any nonconformities are found they must be corrected before an occupancy permit is issued.

But the way that height is measured is the crux of the issue. Traditionally homeowners have been allowed to use the method of measuring height at any point from the foundation out 10 feet. A consistent point is selected – in Ayer's case, it was the outer face of the foundation wall — to establish a perimeter line, and then the ground elevation is averaged to determine the mean grade around the building.

However, the traditional way used to determine height has come under fire during the 3 Jerusalem Lane hearing process. Whealler said the method does not determine a height "unique" to a structure because it leaves where the perimeter line is placed up to the homeowner. In other words, measurements taken from either at the foundation or anywhere within10 feet of the foundation can come up with different "heights." For example, if the ground elevation drops off five feet away and the five-foot perimeter line is used measurement is used, the "height" of the building would be less than when measured at the foundation.

Whealler said two different people measuring a building should not come up with two different numbers.

But the zoning regulations — which say height is determined "above the mean level of the ground within 10 feet of the outside walls of the structure" — do not spell out how to use the more complicated method discussed by the board. That would determine the average grade around the entire area of the building by using a series of profile points no further than 10 feet out.

"The bylaw doesn't specify two points or 200," Chittick said in a telephone interview.

[Structures in Cohasset are limited to 35 feet, but not to the peak of the roof. The town measures height halfway between the plate line and the peak of the roof.]

Even Whealler said at the June 19 continuation of the hearing, he was willing to accept the method used for 3 Jerusalem Lane, which sits on a promontory and therefore looks much higher, because "you got it from the building inspector, and that's what's been used in the past."

But it appeared this week, the ZBA may be leaning toward changing the way height is measured. Chittick said the board may try to use the new way of determining height and the results could be the same. As currently calculated the height of the house is about 33-1/2 feet.

After Monday's meeting, Sawyer, who will wait to analyze the decision, said while it's OK to change the rules going forward, it is not fair to make changes retroactive.

"They have not said what their new interpretation of height definition is," Sawyer said. "They may be changing the way it's been done in the past."

In addition to a final set of as-built plans and height measurements, ZBA also conditioned the special permit prohibiting a large outcropping of ledge at the front of the house from being removed or demolished.

The board said in the house is not a danger to health and safety, and is not as obtrusive to the Jerusalem Lane neighborhood as it first appeared. Therefore, it is not substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood, the standard in the bylaw used for determining whether a special permit should be granted.

"It's a big house and I wish it had not been so big," Chittick said. "But is it bigger by far than anything else in the neighborhood? No."

Cohasset folk help find lost canine

Badger is back home in Scituate

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Badger Barbuto has been grounded. But unlike most nine-year-olds, Badger isn't being punished for staying up too late, watching too much TV or playing too many computer games.

He's being kept close to home after having wandered off from his Scituate home and being lost for a week – circumstances that sent his "mom" Jo Barbuto into overdrive trying to locate the Jack Russell terrier.

"He was very quiet and subdued and Jack Russells aren't quiet and subdued."
— Jo Barbuto, Scituate

"It was the worst week of my life," Barbuto says about the frantic effort she made to find her beloved dog.

But thanks to several people in Cohasset, who spotted Badger in town, the roaming canine is back at his Edgar Road home again.

After Barbuto posted flyers around the area, the owner at Dad's Variety Store on Hatherly Road told her a customer thought he'd seen the dog in neighboring Cohasset.

Barbuto contacted Tina Watson at Cohasset Hardware, who helped put the word out, and soon Barbuto was receiving calls about Badger sightings.

The following Saturday, a house painter along Parker Avenue tried to nab Badger, who had been missing a week at that point, and who was tired, hungry and confused. A man walking along Border Street also spotted the dog.

"He was completely lost and frightened," Barbuto said about Badger, who has been home a little more than two weeks now.

Later that Saturday, Watson jumped in her pickup and found Barbuto along Summer Street to let her know Badger had been corralled at the ramp in the harbor near the Cohasset Harbor Inn (formerly Kimball's).

"I'd been searching for three or four hours at that point and I was hot and crying," Barbuto recalled.

At the ramp Diane Silvia of Border Street tried to catch Badger, who was so upset at this point he bit her on the finger, said Barbuto.

"I felt terrible, Badger had never bitten anyone before," she said. "But he was lost, hungry and scared."

The police were there and a man on a boat also tried to entice Badger out with some water to no avail.

Once Barbuto arrived she went down the ramp and retrieved Badger, who "was absolutely rigid," she said.

Barbuto, whose front fence is down due to work being done on her home, thinks once Badger got out with all the rain, he lost his scent and just kept wandering.

Badger, who is on antibiotics for his paws that sustained burns from walking hours on the asphalt, has become more like himself over the past few days.

"He was very quiet and subdued and Jack Russells aren't quiet and subdued," she said.

Barbuto wants to thank everyone in Scituate and Cohasset who helped locate Badger, with special thanks to Steve at Dad's Variety, Watson and Silvia.

"We dog people are a breed of our own," she said. "And there are a lot of dog people around."

Badger wandered off from his Scituate home and was found safe in Cohasset a week later.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Bittersweet time

The Staples' TV commercial in which a Dad is positively gleeful as he buys back-to-school supplies for his two glum children is good for a laugh.

It's true that hurried parents, especially those who work full-time and are faced with daycare issues in the summer, are happy to see September roll around again.

While others, who enjoyed two-plus months of lazy days with no set schedule, must readjust to hectic mornings, alarm clocks, after-school activities and homework.

In either case, while our children are school-aged we don't always appreciate that those days are numbered. We get caught up in going here and there, and everywhere — often compressing as much into our available time as possible. That's especially true for those of us who can't be stay-at-home Moms or Dads, and must pack all the homework help, youth sports and music lessons into our "free time."

Then seemingly before we know it, we're attending our last high school or college graduation and we start communicating with our children by email. The only contact we have with school buses is when we're stuck behind one on our way to work.

The summers come and go, and the patter of little feet, smelly ice hockey bags, and sandy Mickey Mouse beach towels are all gone. When we see Moms with coffee cups in hand, waiting at the end of the street for the school bus until it collects their first-grader or Kindergartner, we're a little envious.

Where did the years go? Did we do it right? Did we spend enough time just kicking up our heels with our kids? Did we lie down on the grass together and figure out which clouds looked like dinosaurs or elephants? Did we play cards at night as a family? Or, was it all one big blur?

We always thought of September as the "beginning" of the year for our family. The new school year provided a time to reassess, plan and prioritize. With new teachers, new schedules and new interests — it was an exciting time. Still, those elementary, middle school, high school and college years, all went by much too fast.

So as the pace picks up, try to keep everything in perspective. Enjoy these moments while you can and make some happy memories.

LIBRARY CORNER

Junior volunteers

A big thank you to the girls that volunteered in the Children's Room this summer, Kerry McCabe, Sydney Fortin, Dominique Rioux, and Paige Collins cleaned the covers of all the picture books and the covers of all the holiday picture books. It was an incredible task! They also helped prepare materials for story hour, set up the Story Hour Room, and cleaned up after story hour. They were instrumental in the success of the summer programs.

Estimate

Time to estimate the jar of beans. The children in Cohasset have been putting one bean in the jar for each book they have read this summer. The jar is full! It is now time to estimate how many books we have read this summer.

Book bags

Mrs. Moody will be on vacation from Aug. 30, through Sept. 9. Successfully completed logs can be left in the basket under the clock for her to find when she returns or, you can wait and see her in person. Remember all participants in the summer reading program that have successfully complete their goal has earned a certificate and a book bag. Congratulations to the children who have already received their reward.

Neighbors gear up to fight Cedarmere

TO THE EDITOR:

As the mid-August wind blows sand, partially obscuring remnants left on the beach from the day's activities, so too does the Planning Board's preliminary approval of the Cedarmere Residence Development leave many untended issues on a field that has been swept over by a Board unabashed in its support for the project.

Abutters and residents in the immediate area were originally shown preliminary site plans and schematic drawings of the buildings at a meeting at the former Hayes Estate on Saturday, Aug. 2. We were invited by the Town's Planning Board to attend the developer's presentation to the board on Wednesday, Aug. 6 and provided an opportunity to comment on the plans. Most of us expressed serious concerns about the project's density and its potential adverse impact on traffic, pedestrian safety, surface water drainage, septic systems, and the environment and noise levels in the immediate neighborhood. We also requested some assurances that the development would embody the level of landscaping and quality of construction materials depicted in the drawings.

Given the sheer number of questions and issues raised during the meeting, the board wisely opted to defer all answers and to reconvene on the following Wednesday to address the issues. The Vice-Chairman (Bill Good) did, however, seize the moment to expound upon his support of the project in the face of the overwhelming level of concern expressed by the immediate neighborhood. This left us feeling that we had been steamrollered by a board that had made up its mind and was merely "paying lip service" to our legitimate concerns.

The Planning Board met again on Wednesday, Aug.13 and the Cedarmere sponsors attempted to answer some of the concerns which were raised the week before. These concerns have still not been adequately addressed. The board then granted preliminary approval to this project which will increase Cohasset's housing stock by approximately 5 percent (the largest single development in the history of the town).

On Monday, Aug. 18 the Cedarmere sponsors met with the Sewer Commission and asked that their project be granted a connection to town sewer ahead of all of us (eg: little harbor, et al) who have been waiting and hoping for the ability to connect for years. Thankfully the Sewer Commission did not give in to the pressure of the Cedarmere sponsors and deferred any action until definitive plans are submitted.

At the beach, you cannot bury sharp or hard objects since they will come back to injure you or some other unwitting beachgoer as a cut foot, stubbed toe or some other environmental hazard. In planning you cannot avoid the difficult issues associated with development by burying them in someone else's backyard. One hundred plus units with more than 200-plus cars will generate water running through hundreds of showers, toilets, washing machines and garden hoses that must be discharged into the local ecosystem. Someone will get hurt either physically or economically as a result of this development unless a more thoughtful, responsible approach is undertaken.

While some falsely believe the 105-unit development will have limited impact upon the schools, they are wrong. Many of the targeted buyers are older Cohasset residents who will sell their homes to young families with children. In addition the proposed units are reportedly, relatively large (2,400 s.f.), and could accommodate school-age grandchildren with or without a single parent.

It is our understanding that Cedarmere represents the first application submitted under the recently created "Senior Multi-Family Residence Overlay District". Accordingly, each step of the permitting process should be fully scrutinized to ensure full compliance with the intent of this new bylaw. While we laud the merits of the initiative and believe it could provide attractive options for seniors, the level of density that it allows is absurd. The practical implementation of the program as currently conceived at the former Hayes Estate will transform a single-family residential neighborhood into a dense multi-family project. The neighborhood is opposed, has organized and will fight the development. Please listen.

Train cost disputed

TO THE EDITOR:

I take issue with the recent news articles concerning the costs of the restoration of the Greenbush Line. In a letter dated June 16, 2003 and addressed to Andrew Brennan, the director of Environmental Affairs for the MBTA, the Army Corps of Engineers stated they would require further consultations on the seven outstanding design issues. It further stated that: No work within their jurisdiction may be started until the MBTA receives a permit signed by their district engineer. None of these issues have been resolved as of this date.

This project cannot go forward without the permits from the Army Corps of Engineers. Additionally, we expect the MBTA and the state to honor the mitigation agreements that they signed with the affected towns.

Until these issues are resolved, it is impossible for the MBTA to put forth a credible figure for the final costs of the project. To represent a final cost figure of $479 million is misleading and a disservice to the taxpayers of Massachusetts.

Train figures

TO THE EDITOR:

Martha A.R. Bewick, member of Advocates for Transportation Alternatives, makes the following statement in a widely distributed and published anti-Greenbush article: "That same year (1995), Hingham voted unanimously against the train in another record-sized town meeting and Cohasset voters also rejected rail — albeit by a narrower margin."

The Cohasset Mariner of May 18, 1995, shows the opposite to be true of Cohasset with its headline, "Railroad prevails in photo finish." The front page story about the Cohasset train referendum reports as follows: "The question asking if voters favor restoration of the train passed by the narrowest of margins with 1,383 saying yes and 1,380 saying no. However, 1,329 voters said they'd use the train to commute if such a service was available. That's about four times the number the MBTA has projected for Cohasset."

The erroneous statement by Ms. Bewick, whether careless mistake or deliberate distortion, can't help but cast doubt on other claims and tactics of this persistently obstructionist group.

Actually, up-to-date figures show many more people in the Greenbush corridor want the train than object to it. Latest figures by a professional survey team show approval totaling 63 percent versus disapproval at 19 percent. In April of this year The South Shore Chamber of Commerce announced results of a survey by the independent firm, Atlantic Marketing and Research of Boston. The firm used nationally accepted polling techniques to survey the four most affected towns, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate, and three abutting towns, Hull, Marshfield and Norwell. With a 5-percent margin for error, the results were as follows: "Approved or strongly approved Greenbush restoration": Weymouth 60 percent, Cohasset, 59 percent, Hingham 40 percent, Scituate 66 percent. In the abutting towns, approval ratings were even higher: Hull 75 percent, Marshfield 76 percent and Norwell 73 percent.

It is obvious to many and to us that the existing right of way in the Greenbush corridor makes restoration of the train the most logical, feasible and effective transportation alternative.

Idle thoughts about auto emissions

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Has anyone looked at a car idling at the post office and thought about the small thoughtless ways people pollute? None of the old reasons for letting a car run are valid anymore: It doesn't save time or money, it's worse for the life of the engine, the air conditioning will cool the car off immediately. And if it's a SUV or truck, the reasons are compelling for turning the car off; it's giving off harmful emissions. The Board has recently received complaints about big trucks remaining idling for long periods of time on work sites. This is not only unhealthy; it's against the law. Massachusetts General Law Chapter 90 section 16A says that no vehicle can remain idling for more than five minutes except in specially defined exceptional cases, under penalty of a fine of $100 for the first offense or $500 for each succeeding offence.

According to a recent state report, Massachusetts has just had the worst air quality summer on record.

According to a recent state report, Massachusetts has just had the worst air quality summer on record. There's a brown haze over Mass Bay; asthma rates are higher than ever, and according to the American Lung Association, asthma is one of the nation's most common and costly diseases, having a substantial impact on health, quality of life, and the economy, and resulting in approximately 5,000 deaths annually. That impact is especially serious for young children, as evidenced by the fact that for children under the age of five, asthma rates increased more than 74 percent between 1980 and 1996 (American Lung Association). Recent studies now confirm that vehicle exhaust emissions cause lung disorders.

If you're interested in seeing the text of the Vehicle Idling law or what the EPA says about the problems idling cause for large vehicles, stop by the Board of Health and pick up a copy.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

COMMENTARY

JEFF CUTLER

Sound isn't just a sense. It's a signal to the body that something is about to happen, or a trigger to a memory deep in your subconscious.

If you're unclear on this concept, think about how your heart still quickens when you hear the first peals of music from the ice-cream man on a hot May afternoon, or how scared you feel for a screeching cat at 1 a.m., or how comforted you feel when you hear a familiar voice.

Sometimes the absence of sound can be just as powerful. When a familiar sound is silenced, the mind tries to recreate the experience but can't quite do it.

It's a feeling of anger, frustration and loss.

Ken Coleman, whose voice was familiar and friendly to hundreds of thousands of baseball fans regionally, took his sound with him last week when he died at Jordan Hospital in Plymouth. And while I hadn't heard his voice on radio for many years, I'm now sitting at my desk straining at the silence.

In my youth, Ken Coleman was baseball. We watched hundreds of games at home with the television turned down and the radio on. Coleman painted pictures with his words that were more vivid than the action on the screen. And these were images you could take with you in a little box wherever you went during the summer.

For me, Nantasket Beach was a patchwork of sound on the weekends. Amid the rock music and squealing of kids, you'd hear Coleman's distinctive voice puncturing the air. Often, the only reason I'd get up from my beach chair was to walk closer to a radio that had the Sox on. And if the Sox were on, so was Coleman.

Ken Coleman was more than baseball. According to his lengthy résumé at a local speakers' bureau, he had other announcing credits including: more than a dozen years with the NFL (he's known in Cleveland for announcing every single touchdown that Jim Brown scored), half a dozen with college football, 12 years doing television news, some college and professional basketball, and multiple narration projects. Coleman was also an author, a father and a grandfather.

Ken Coleman had a familiar voice that gave me comfort, made me think and made me smile.

It's now an August day in the middle of another pennant race. As usual, the Red Sox are still in it.

And while the collection of sounds from Fenway Park is a familiar cacophony of vendors, children, balls on gloves and bats, and even announcers, it's not complete. The symphony is missing a player. So are we.

Jeff Cutler is a freelance writer from Hingham. His writing credits include Mountain Bike America: Boston from Globe Pequot Press and a series of articles in regional and national magazines. He's currently working on his first children's book and a coffee-table book of local architecture.

Birding for all — old and young, on foot or by wheelchair!

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Most birders (and bird hike leaders) starting down a trail are more focused on listening and looking for birds than on exactly how uneven or how steep the path will be. But what about the person who must get around in a wheelchair? Or the person whose arthritis makes walking difficult? Or the person who is temporarily on crutches due to a broken ankle? Or the person with knees prone to giving out? Or the person with heart or breathing problems who needs a place to sit periodically? These people may be just as eager to go birding, but need to know what lies ahead in order to prevent getting into a situation where they need help. Birding from a car window works in some places, but has its limitations.

It is not just people who have trouble moving around that need help. People who are deaf and blind would also like to be able to enjoy birding.

Until recently not much thought has gone into making parks, nature preserves and sanctuaries user-friendly for people with disabilities. On April 1, 2000, a man named Bo Beolens from the United Kingdom founded Disabled Birders Association International. This group has well over 300 members, both disabled and able-bodied. An American chapter of Disabled Birder's Association (DBA) was formed in 2002. The goal of these groups is to promote universal access to all facilities, services and resources for birdwatchers without jeopardizing the needs of birds and other wildlife.

Parks, refuges, sanctuaries and other open space areas need to provide more boardwalk trails. These trails must not be blocked by gates denying access to the very people they are trying to help. (This has been known to happen.) More places to sit, either benches or just convenient tree stumps at the edge of paths, would be helpful. Better signage describing the length and condition of trails would save people from encountering unexpected obstacles. Bird blinds with ramp access need viewing slots at appropriate levels for children and people in wheelchairs.

The "site guide" on the DBA USA website thus far lists only one wheelchair accessible birding area, and it is in Texas! There does not seem to be a satisfactory list of accessible areas in Massachusetts. The Parker River National Wildlife Refuge includes a 6.3 mile road down Plum Island in Newburyport and is a premier birding area in Massachusetts. Several observation points and one short boardwalk trail are described as wheelchair accessible. Unfortunately the map showing trails and parking areas does not include "accessible by wheelchair" in its legend.

It is not just people who have trouble moving around that need help. People who are deaf and blind would also like to be able to enjoy birding. Blind people with good hearing can learn to identify birds by their calls. We all know that birds are usually heard before they are seen. In fact many that are heard singing are never seen at all. Deaf people probably won't find as many birds, but can train themselves to be more alert to even the tiniest movement.

John V. Dennis, noted ornithologist and author of several books, including "Complete Guide to Bird Feeding" lost vision in one eye due to a tumor late in his life. Before his death in 2002, he wrote this advice in the January/February '03 issue of "Bird Watcher's Digest" for people with similar handicaps: "Choose a species that's easy to find, relatively tame, easy to watch, present year-round and scrappy enough not to be cowed at the feeder. I find that the mourning dove meets all these requirements. Not a day goes by that I don't hear this dove's mournful cooing or see one or more in my backyard. Let the bird of your choice help you through an illness or make a handicap easier to live with. It's been a great help to me."

Birding can easily be enjoyed by people of all ages. Exposing children to this activity at a young age encourages them to enjoy the wonders of nature and may make them more concerned about the environment when they become adults. Children are naturally curious and learn quickly. There are ways to make their early experiences more enjoyable and less frustrating.

Start with large birds that are easy to see. Egrets and herons are beautiful, a little exotic, and tend to stay in one place long enough to identify and enjoy before they fly away. Ducks are also good "beginning" birds to look for if you have a pond nearby. In Hingham, it is possible to get fairly close to gulls at the bathing beach.

Backyard birds and feeder birds allow close-up views and a chance to observe behavior. For young children there is the added advantage of not having to drive a distance, and when they have had enough, they can easily go do something else. Brightly colored birds such as goldfinches and cardinals are easy to see. As children become more adept at using binoculars, they can go on longer walks and look for small birds in the bushes. Speaking of binoculars, it helps if they have some reasonably good ones. Equipment that does not work well is a recipe for disappointment. Some organized bird walks and trips are geared toward beginners and welcome children. It is worth checking out activities sponsored by Massachusetts Audubon Society, The Trustees of Reservations, and the South Shore Natural Science Center.

Although there are records of use of animals in therapy going back as far as 1792, the term "pet therapy" was not coined until 1964. At that time Boris Levinson, an American child psychiatrist, began using dogs to help severely withdrawn children to talk. Writing up his results in scientific journals led to other studies by more scientists showing the benefits of animals for psychiatric patients, nursing home residents, and even prisoners. It is no longer just cats and dogs that are being used, but many nursing homes are acquiring caged birds and putting up wild bird feeding stations. This seems to result in patients becoming less depressed and more interested in their surroundings. It also helps stimulate conversation when family or friends visit. For patients who were active birders in their younger years, monitoring a bird feeder helps to maintain a lifelong hobby.

Birding should be an activity that anyone can enjoy. Let us hope we can continue to make progress toward reaching that goal.

Right out of Britney's closet

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Have you seen the latest lines of clothing they're selling to the kids as they head back to school?

Do they really wear pajamas to class now?

Like the junior miss on Page 5 of the Bob's Stores catalogue that came with your Sunday papers this week, the one with the pale lilac velour zip jacket and pants with a drawstring that . . . well, you'll just have to see for yourself.

I could be wrong, of course. These may not be back to school clothes at all. But why would they been selling beachwear when the targets of it all are going back to the classroom in a week or so?

But enough of these Britney Spears clothing lines have been showing up in the neighborhood school house to lead the Braintree School Committee to ban tank tops and other revealing items of clothing.

The problem is showing signs of spreading from the back to the front of the classroom.

Hey, that's my old school and that sounds alarmingly like a dress code, too.

By coincidence, just the other day I ran into a classmate who graduated with me at a time when ice covered most of the earth and, of course, the meeting forced me to get out my high school yearbook for a dose of nostalgia.

There was no dress code that I can recall yet it seemed from the pictures in the yearbook that the girls all wore blouses and skirts that ended below the knee and the boys wore shirts and more than likely a tie too.

But whining about student dress and debating dress codes is old stuff. The problem is showing signs of spreading from the back to the front of the classroom.

A lot of schools have found that they not only have to draw up dress codes for students but for teachers, too, particularly for those just out of college.

Nearly a third of the 70 teachers at Hamilton School in Bridgewater, N. J., had to be cautioned not to come to school in anything out of Britney's closet.

"Who are they dressing to impress?" asked Lorraine Lotowycz, the principal. "Certainly not a 5- 6- 7-year-old child."

A number of schools have drawn up lists of no-nos for new teachers. They include: Shorts or skirts shorter than fingertips when arms are extended toward the knees, exposed tattoos, naked navels, piercings other than earrings, flip-flops, tube tops, halter tops or spaghetti-strap tops.

Juli Kwikkel, the principal of East and West Elementary Schools in conservative Storm Lake, Iowa, was interviewing a teaching-assistant candidate one day when she noticed something unusual about her.

She had a pierced tongue and her tattoo peeked out of her V-necked shirt.

"I thought, 'Oh, my Lord, we're at a new plateau here,'" said Juli.

Common sense urged

Dear Mark and the Board:

Something is not right here - we, the town of Cohasset - the village of Cohasset - have very limited space for driving and parking in the Village - it's the way the Town grew up - and yet here we are cutting down the corners and widths of some streets when we should be looking for ways to provide as much parking as possible and make it easy for vehicles to move through the village. We're doing the exact opposite.

I'm aware of the pedestrian activity in the Village - there's a lot of people walking, (that's good) - there's a lot of people driving, (that's good) and these two elements work together. There is courtesy between the two. Vehicles do stop for people - go downtown and watch.

Please let's cut down on the limited space that we have. Use your judgement - use your common sense - leave the area/space we have alone - just redo the sidewalks and roadway.

Greenbush, yes!

DEAR GOVERNOR ROMNEY:

Although the opponents seem to make the most noise, it's clear to me that the great majority favor the project and are heartily sick of the opposition.

In time the initial cost (whatever it turns out to be) will prove insignificant relative to the advantages of reestablishing the line and thus providing a basis for upgrading its capacity as it becomes ever more heavily used. In a few years it will be recognized unquestionably as the life-line of the South Shore, and hopefully those who made it happen will be remembered with gratitude.

The alternatives proposed by the opponents of Greenbush illustrate wishful thinking rather than quantitative and realistic analysis.

Obviously, effective public transportation with the potential for huge capacity eventually must be provided for the South Shore, and further delay of the inevitable only increases the cost. The time to start is now!

MBTA gets OK to hike T fares despite declining ridership

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL C. LEVENSON

I was amazed," said Sarah Glatt, one of the protesters outside the State House last week. "It's just so unfair."

On a hot summer day, with few people paying attention to Beacon Hill and fewer lawmakers attending legislative sessions, House and Senate leaders slipped two controversial environmental measures into an unrelated spending bill, and shipped it to Gov. Mitt Romney's desk in about six hours.

No public hearing. No debate. Certainly no press releases.

The Democratic leaders of the House and Senate decided a sparsely attended informal session last week, where only noncontroversial matters are supposed to be handled, was the time to rubber stamp a measure protecting an upscale East Boston condo development from public access and environmental lawsuits and another measure making it easier for the MBTA to ignore declining ridership and move ahead with a fare hike Jan. 1. Any one member could stop the bill but no one objected. Most of the public and the Legislature learned about the provisions in the following morning's papers. By then, it was left to the Conservation Law Foundation and other watchdog groups to beseech Romney to veto the provisions out of the spending bill. As of midday last Thursday, the Governor hadn't said what he would do.

Stealth lawmaking has become common practice in the Legislature, and it undoubtedly helped propel Romney into office on a pledge to "clean up the mess on Beacon Hill." Political observers have long said that voters like the idea of a Republican in the Corner Office who will serve as a check on the excesses of a Democratic Legislature. Romney dodged questions about whether he would veto the provisions. "I don't have a direction for you yet as to how we'll come out," he told reporters. But by later that afternoon, a response had come. The Governor signed the fare hike provision into law, saying the measure recognizes that there is "no means" by which the MBTA can accurately track ridership data.

The assertion came about an hour after Joseph Pesaturo, MBTA spokesman, said the Central Transportation Planning Staff, a group of analysts within the Boston Metropolitan Planning Organization, were "doing the analysis" on ridership data. "CTPS is tracking the ridership data," Pesaturo said. "They're doing the analysis and are going to provide the data the statute requires."

Romney directed the MBTA to rid the system of inefficiencies, conduct a review of its finances, reach out to the public, and make efforts to increase the number of people who use the T before putting in place any fare increase.

Shawn Feddeman, Romney's spokeswoman, said, "They don't have an accurate or precise enough mechanism without a margin of error." Pesaturo said later, "Because of the antiquated fare collection systems, it makes it difficult to put a precise number on ridership. For now, we have to rely on planning models that CTPS develops."

In January, subway fares are now set to rise from $1 to $1.25, even if ridership plummets. Romney, as he signed the measure into law, also directed the MBTA to rid the system of inefficiencies, conduct a review of its finances, reach out to the public, and make efforts to increase the number of people who use the T before putting in place any fare increase.

The East Boston provision was sent back to the Legislature with recommended amendments to narrow its scope. As written, Romney warned it "may have unintended consequences" on the Public Waterfront Act, which environmentalists say can be used to force developers to make concessions for public access. The ball is back in the Legislature's court.

Out on the steps of the Statehouse, Glatt, 22, of Chelmsford, and about 75 protesters organized by Alternatives for Community and Environment and the T Riders Union had just arrived after marching from Washington Street, chanting in opposition to the fare hike and expressing outrage at the quick pace of change and lack of public input. "What do we want?" the protesters chanted. "Public process!"

• A victory for Cape Wind — Cape Wind executives won a legal battle in their quest to build the nation's first offshore wind farm in Nantucket Sound. A federal judge in Boston ruled the state had no authority to stop construction of a data collection tower that Cape Wind Associates erected last spring.

• Bill proposed to toughen securities law — Democratic lawmakers proposed toughening state securities law to make it easier to jail violators for fraud. Sens. Jarrett Barrios of Cambridge and Andrea Nuciforo of Pittsfield proposed the bill a day after the Globe reported that that a Lehman Brothers analyst had issued a higher rating for stock in a California electronics company in 2000, yielding to pressure from someone at a company that was financed by Bain Capital, Gov. Romney's former firm.

• Dorchester food company honored — A fledgling company that caters events featuring healthy ethnic food was honored by Gov. Romney. City Fresh Foods of Dorchester, which employs 38 people, received the Inner City Investment Award in a West Lawn ceremony that's part of Romney's "Jobs First" initiative. The nine-year-old firm delivers its organic food in an electric-powered truck.

• Attorneys protest lack of pay, prod action on budget bill — Private attorneys who defend indigent clients began refusing cases, saying they had not been paid $15 million owed them by the state. The House and Senate hastily passed a budget bill and Romney signed it into law last Thursday. "The prospect of our criminal court sessions grinding to a halt poses a potential threat to our public safety, which is a primary responsibility of government," Romney said.

• Good news for the economy — The Massachusetts Port Authority reported during the first seven months of this year cargo containers ships moved 14 percent more goods in and out of Boston's port. The Associated Industries of Massachusetts also reported that Massachusetts exported $9 billion worth of merchandise during the first half of this year — an increase of 14 percent over the same period in 2002, and well above the national average of 2.7 percent growth.

• Test scores up — Massachusetts students scored nearly two points higher than the national average in every category on the national American College Test, a college entrance exam similar to the SAT, the Education Department reported. The news seemed to continue a trend of Massachusetts students outperforming their counterparts in most states.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on three roll calls from earlier July sessions. All of the roll call votes are on legislative action surrounding Gov. Romney's overrides of items in the $22.1 billion fiscal 2004 state budget.

LEGAL SERVICES FOR INDIGENT (H 4004)

House 147-10, Senate 35-5, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $7,564,142 in funding for the Massachusetts Legal Assistance Corporation (MLAC). The MLAC provides legal representation for indigent and disadvantaged residents. Override supporters said these services ensure equal access to the justice system for thousands of below-poverty level Massachusetts residents including accused criminals, the poor, the elderly, battered women, tenants and Medicaid recipients. They argued that the program actually saves the state money because it helps many people secure various federal benefits. Override opponents said the MLAC often wastes money by representing people who bring frivolous lawsuits against the state. They argued that the state should not fund this account while cutting back human service programs and said more lawyers should offer free services to the indigent until the state's economy improves. (A "Yea" vote is for the $7,564,142. A "Nay" vote is against the $7,564,142).

$250,000 FOR READING TO THE BLIND (H 4004)

House 141-15, Senate 38-2, overrode Gov. Romney's $250,000 veto reduction (from $500,000 to $250,000) in funding for the Talking Information Center-- a non-profit service that helps the blind and disabled by providing the reading of daily newspapers, magazines, books and other materials on seven radio stations across Massachusetts. Override supporters said this service is invaluable to 20,000 blind people and noted the $500,000 cut represents about two-thirds of the Talking Information Center's entire budget and would almost wipe out the service. Override opponents said no one likes to cut good programs but argued this is one of those necessary cuts that must be implemented in order to balance the budget, prevent cuts in other programs and avoid new taxes. (A "Yea" vote is for the additional $250,000. A "Nay" vote is against the additional $250,000).

Senator Hedlund: Y — Representative Bradley: Y

$125,000 FOR SUICIDE PREVENTION (H 4004)

House 132-24, Senate 39-0, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $125,000 for statewide and community-based suicide prevention, intervention and surveillance activities and the implementation of a statewide suicide prevention program. Override supporters said this money is essential to fund this important battle against a major public health problem. They noted that suicide results in an average of 500 deaths annually, exceeds the number of motor vehicle-related deaths and occurs twice as often as homicides. Override opponents said it is an unpleasant necessity to reduce funding for good programs but argued that the state cannot afford the $125,000 during this fiscal crisis. They said that continued overrides of the governor's vetoes will result in an unbalanced budget, cuts to other programs and/or tax hikes. (A "Yea" vote is for the $125,000. A "Nay" vote is against the $125,000).

Senator Hedlund: Y — Representative Bradley: Y

Whopping water quality improvement grant awarded

The Water Commission has been awarded a $255,000 state grant to pay 60 percent of a four-year $425,000 project designed to reduce non-point source pollution and improve the water quality of Lily Pond, the town's primary drinking water supply.

"This is a very significant project, which will reduce nutrient loading into Lily Pond by over 50 percent," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "This grant will help improve drinking water quality and better protect public health in Cohasset."

The major water quality problem with Lily Pond is too much nutrients — phosphorus and nitrates — which come from runoff from lawns, septic systems, driveways, streets, and from storm-water drainage, McNabb explained. This excess nutrient loading increases the growth of algae and weeds and contributes to the generation of taste and odor problems and to potentially harmful "disinfection" byproducts in the drinking water.

"The project also includes the installation of a spill control facility at the intersection of Pond Street and Route 3A to protect Lily Pond from any pollution which may result from an accident at that intersection which could flow into Peppermint Brook and then right into the Pond, he said.

McNabb said in this project,the Water Commission will design and construct storm-water control and treatment systems which will utilize structural best management practices (BMP's) and incorporate low impact development (LID) strategies wherever possible to contain and minimize off-site flows and pollutant loading into Lily Pond. Structural BMP improvement options to be considered will include; hooded catchbasins, bioretention facilities, Rain Gardens, roadside swales with biofilters and spill containment facilities.

The project will also incorporate pre- and post-construction environmental monitoring, on-going operation and maintenance and a public education program that will invite residents in the Lily Pond tributary to participate in reducing non-point source pollutants through the use of slow release and no/low phosphorus lawn fertilizers and through individual or neighborhood scale use of low-impact development innovative technologies designed to promote on-site retention and treatment of storm water.

The grant came from the 319 Nonpoint Source Pollution Grant Program administered by the state Department of Environmental Protection and the EPA. The grant pays for 60 percent, or $255,000 of the total $425,000 cost of the project. The remaining $170,000 will be funded by the Water Commission out of funds appropriated at the March 29, 2003 Annual Town Meeting.

McNabb said the need for this project has been established by two recent environmental studies prepared for the Water Commission – the "Surface Water Supply Protection Plan," by Norfolk Ram, and the "Lily Pond Limnology and Waters Edge Study," by EBSR. Each of these studies were funded by $45,000 state grants, he said.

Retiring custodians to stay awhile

Cleaning duties for the schools will be handled by an outside company this fall, leaving four of the current nine custodians out of a job. However, because two of the custodians were nearing retirement, Supt. Edward Malvey asked School Committee members to make an exception and keep the two on until their dates of retirement in the next few months.

One of the custodians was planning on retirement, effective Nov. 1 and will be kept on in the schools until then. The second is considering taking an early retirement package and will tentatively retire in either December or January, depending on his acceptance of the package offered.

Malvey said the schools are able to pay for the extra help because custodians were kept on during the summer while the details were being worked out with the cleaning service, which saved the schools money on the outside service. He also said the cleaning service is going to be taking over on the purchase of supplies, which will free up money in the school's budget as well.

In the future, Malvey said he would like to have a fifth custodian on full-time who would be able to fill in when someone was out for the day, or provide additional help when needed.

"It makes sense to have a swing person," Malvey said.

In the event the second custodian does not accept the early retirement package, Malvey said he would be a likely candidate for the fifth custodial position, should it work out.

The two custodians who will not be returning this fall have found employment elsewhere. Malvey said he wishes them well.

For student research center, bacteria studies lead the list

Wins competitive grant for program

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"It was great to be there and see professional scientists at work."
— Jack Buckley

The Center for Student Coastal Research has been awarded a $3,800 grant by the Gulf of Maine Council, which provides funding for CSCR staff and students to receive training by professional bacteriologists.

Through the Action Plan Grants Program of the Gulf of Maine Council, funding is awarded to groups of citizens and community organizations that support the goals of the Council's "Action Plan." The CSCR was awarded funding for professional development for monitoring bacteria in Cohasset Harbor.

"It puts us in a position to advance the work we've been doing," said CSCR president Jack Buckley, adding the grant application process was a competitive one, open to any eastern states with shoreline on the Gulf of Maine.

Located in Mariners Park, the Center works with local schools to provide a facility to help educate and raise awareness about marine and coastal ecosystems in Cohasset, and provides programs that will not only teach children about sea life, but will benefit the town as well. Participants gather data on the various coastal watersheds, which can be built upon each year, and used as a resource by the town.

With the funds received by the grant, CSCR students and staff traveled to the Department of Environmental Protection lab in Lawrence, Mass. to meet with Dr. Oscar Pancorbo, director of the Senator William X. Wall Experiment Station, for a bacteriology training session. Along with Buckley, who is also a teacher at the middle-high school, teachers Pattie McGrail and Lisa Mullen, and students Dan Allen and Laura Genello learned valuable information from Pancorbo.

"It was phenomenal. He's one of the leading authorities on bacteria," Buckley said.

Pancorbo provided the group with much information on various microbiological studies, including information on sources of contamination, indicators of contamination, standards and sampling, spending the most time discussing Environmental Protection Agency lab methods for testing for Escherichia coli, and enterococci in recreational waters. There were also hands-on experiments to participate in.

"It was great to be there and see professional scientists at work," Buckley said.

Because of the wonderful experience at the lab, Buckley sent a letter to Environmental Secretary Ellen Roy Herzfelder, encouraging her to visit Dr. Pancorbo's lab. In the letter, he said the group was "deeply impressed by the variety of critical environmental work that takes place under Dr. Pancorbo," and were equally impressed by his enthusiasm for sharing his expertise.

In addition to the work being done with this new bacterial information, Buckley said the CSCR has been having much success with its other summer programs.

"The initial feedback is that it was highly successful," said Buckley in regards to the Seaside Adventure programs for students in grades four through six.

However, with school back in session next week, the obstacle still remains of what the best way is to continue on with research while the weather is still warm.

"Somehow, everyone will fit it into their schedules," Buckley said, while students try to juggle academics, sports, and extra-curricular activities. He said hopefully, work can still be done on the weekends.

"We still have a couple of months of opportunity," he said, adding that when the weather gets colder, bacteria will naturally die off.

The CSCR has scheduled an open house for Sunday, Sept. 28 from 1-3 p.m. to display this summer's student research into assessing the health of Cohasset's coastal environment, to be held at CSCR research facilities in the former Hagerty building off Parker Avenue.

Planning board must rethink Cedarmere

TO THE EDITOR:

I'm sure that I was not alone among my fellow residents in being incredulous at the article in the Cohasset Mariner last week in which a state official was quoted as saying that the affordable housing units in the 29-unit apartment building of the proposed Cedarmere project will not count toward our 40B inventory because they are segregated and too dissimilar from the luxury, market-rate townhouse units elsewhere in the complex.

One of the primary purposes of the Senior Overlay District — to increase our inventory of affordable housing units in order to ward off 40B developments — will have been totally defeated if Cedarmere's affordable units are not allowed to be counted by the state.

In addition, the other primary goal of the Senior Overlay District — to create both affordable housing and housing which most Cohasset residents can afford — has been given short shrift in the Planning Board discussion.

Planning Board member Good was quoted in the paper at a previous meeting as describing Cedarmere as "just the sort of project I envisioned when I voted" for the zoning change for the Senior Overlay District. I don't know what Town Meeting Mr. Good attended, but it certainly was not the one I was at last fall, when at no time did any of the proponents of the Senior Overlay District tell us, "Oh, and by the way, we need to approve this zoning change to permit developments of which three-quarters will be luxury residences of 2,400 sq. ft. starting at $650,000."

To the contrary, the Senior Overlay District was pitched to us by both the Senior Housing Committee and the Planning Board members themselves as a means for providing housing for all Cohasset senior citizens who, we were told, predominantly are in need of moderately-priced housing units in order to remain in Cohasset after they sell their homes. The Senior Housing Committee told us that they had a project which was both imminent and which would offer affordable housing for all levels of income for our seniors.

But the most striking aspect of the Cedarmere project in this context is that there is nothing for the typical middle-class Cohasset senior citizen who may not qualify by reason of income or assets for so-called affordable housing, but who certainly cannot afford to plunk down $650,000 for a 2,400 sq. ft., luxury condo with a huge tax bill (about $8,000 per year, plus a big monthly condo fee).

A special advertising section in the Globe this Sunday for over-55 developments revealed that most of these projects offer units of 2,000 sq. ft. starting in the mid-$300,000 range. This price range would permit the average Cohasset over-55 couple to sell their home for $600,000; use that cash to buy a condo while keeping some money from that sale in the bank; and reduce their tax bill by almost half. But from what I have read in the Mariner, there is nothing like that at Cedarmere — the choices are either a $650,000 home or a small condo unit in the 29-unit segregated structure near the noise of 3A starting at $170,000.

Another troubling aspect of the way in which the Planning Board has handled the Cedarmere project is that it has placed the proverbial cart before the horse in giving Cedarmere conditional approval prior to the developers having gone before the Sewer Commission. The Planning Board process stands in stark contrast to the Appeals Board hearings on Avalon. Avalon went to the Sewer Commission first — and got turned down — and then tried to buy into Hull's sewage system — and got turned down there — and then had to come up with its own waste treatment plan prior to the hearing process with the Appeals Board. In other words, the Appeals Board had a finished plan before they began their hearing process. But the Planning Board has gone full-steam ahead even though a number of issues are still up in the air.

This process also unfairly has placed the Sewer Commission in the role of bad guy. When the Sewer Commissioners didn't loudly proclaim, "Bravo!" and shower Cedarmere with comments of "Superlative!" from their lips as the Planning Board members did, the developers complained to the Sewer Commission that "you've left us chasing the rabbit." But it was the Planning Board that placed the developers in that position by sending the developers off to the Sewer Commission with virtually no chance of getting permission to hook up to the town waste treatment plant because of the well-known lack of capacity in the plant and the legal and moral imperative for the town to clean up our local public cesspool first (a/k/a Little Harbor) before allowing other sections of the town to hook up.

Moreover, if the Sewer Commission were to hand out a hook-up to Cedarmere because it was determined that the treatment plant has enough capacity for both Cedarmere and Little Harbor as the Cedarmere developers contend, will there be any capacity left for the Senior Housing Committee project? As far as I know, no one is suggesting that our treatment plant can handle Cedarmere, Little Harbor, and a Senior Housing Committee project.

If the Sewer Commissioners are to be taken at their word that they would not consider creating a new sewer district without Town Meeting approval because Town Meeting created the sewer districts in the first place, the town should offer whatever capacity is left after Little Harbor to a development which appeals to the majority of our townspeople, not merely the ultra-wealthy, whether that be the Senior Housing Committee project or a revised Cedarmere project.

The Planning Board is absolutely correct that Cedarmere is a first-class project. We are fortunate that the developers are first-rate people and clearly not the sort of fly-by-night developers who have plagued nearby communities. Moreover, it is highly preferable that a first-class, private developer such as Cedarmere's King Taylor fulfill our community's housing needs than for a town committee to embark on such a complex undertaking. But the Planning Board should insist that it be a development with a large number of mid-priced units of the sort which truly was envisioned when the Senior Overlay District was approved by Town Meeting.

No fun at Sandy Beach

Dear Sandy Beach Association:

Since becoming residents five years ago, my family and I have been frequent summer visitors to Sandy Beach. During a recent visit to the beach, I was surprised to see the enforcement of new restrictions on certain beach activities there were not apparent in prior seasons.

On a windy Sunday morning two weeks ago, I visited the beach with my three young children and my son's small kite, which we have flown on the beach for the past three years since his second birthday. To my chagrin and amazement, the lifeguard told me that kite flying was not allowed on the beach as instructed by the Sandy Beach Association. As a habitual visitor to numerous New England beaches over the past four decades, I have never heard of such a ruling anywhere else. Some nearby bystanders who happened to overhear the bewildering new restriction also were shocked to learn of this policy. I asked the lifeguard for an explanation but she could not offer me one; since that day I have been speculating.

My guess is that the Association has restricted kite flying due to environmental protection or safety reasons. I am not aware that Sandy Beach is officially deemed wildlife or bird protected sanctuary where a flying kite may impinge upon the local natural habitats. Therefore, I have concluded that reasons of safety lie behind forbidding onshore beach kite flying. What puzzles me is why kite flying is deemed more hazardous that any other sporting activities which are not restricted on the beach.

Based on frequency and probability of injury, I find that kite flying is minimally hazardous. While it is possible to see a kite land out of control in gusty winds, there is a greater chance of encountering batted balls from informal baseball games, errantly overthrown footballs or off-target Frisbees hurled unintentionally at passers-by or near-by sun worshippers. And if you are concerned about dangerous objects on the beach, the most prominent is the beach umbrella. How often on windy days have you seen unattended beach umbrellas bent at 45 degrees, ready to launch themselves downwind.

The intent of this letter is to not to suggest that other sporting activities be restricted. Nor am I proposing that beach umbrellas be eliminated. But when determining "risks" of all these objects and their frequency, I find kite flying to among the least dangerous.

Kite flying is a memorable and thoroughly enjoyable family activity. It is a shame that since kite flying has been banned on Sandy Beach there is no other place in town for families to enjoy this event. While there are open spaces at various schools and soccer fields, these locations are not conducive to kite flying since the field (situated well below the tree line) inhibit kites from launching adequately.

I was also surprised to hear discussion of prohibiting boogie boards on the beach. My question on this new decision is not nearly as strong as the one on kite flying because any offshore-related activity does bring in a new element of safety concerns. I am aware of the dangers of true floatation devices, specifically those that are air inflated, and I share concern about untrained swimmers venturing too far from shore with a flotation device and possibly encountering difficulties in such a situation. However, boogie boards are too unstable to become a floatation device for any child older than a toddler. You often see parents towing toddlers along the water's edge. a toddler alone is much too uncoordinated to maintain balance long enough get too far from shore. However, children who are preschoolers or older are sufficiently big and heavy that they cannot stay afloat for more than a second even it they so intended.

If I make one further suggestion: it would be useful to clearly outline the rules of the beach regarding policies during the summer months on activities both offshore and onshore, pets, etc. As a regular donor to the association, I would appreciate seeing this outlined in the annual campaign letter or posted by the entrance to the gate, since not everyone visits the bathhouse.

All's well for Norwell gridders

Abington, Cohasset and Carver expected to challenge favored Clippers in SSL

By TJ Byrne
CORRESPONDENT

There are usually pluses and minuses to each decision and move that is made. For the first time in over two years, the South Shore League has remained in structure from the previous season. With the high school football season rumbling towards it's first weekend, the South Shore League coaches, players and fans are looking forward to the benefits of a stable league structure, as well as revamped and rejuvenated league rivalries.

Over the course of the past two seasons, the South Shore League has said good bye to traditional members Hanover and Norton and welcomed in newcomer Mashpee. The cutting down from eight members to six has forced the remaining schools to look outside the area to fill vacant spots in their schedules. In some cases, teams have not been able to fill a ten game schedule.

With a year of experience under their belts, the South Shore League teams has been able to adjust and fill their schedule with a compliment of ten opponents. Carver has even been able to add an eleventh game to its schedule this year, something Norwell has also managed to continue doing. What is left standing for the Division 5 South Shore League after seasons of maneuvering is a wide open and competitive race for this year's league title.

The reason for such optimism is the same reason most people were against the changes to the league. Although a six team league makes it more difficult to fill out the schedule, it also means teams are playing in only five league games to determine a first place finisher. With a reduced number of league games, each team feels it has a legitimate chance at the title.

Cohasset	3-2	8-2

Farewell Skippers

BIGGER PICTURE

DAVID INGBER

It was about this time of year, in 1999, that I set out to become the Next Jimmy O. I was stepping into the journalistic gym shoes of a star baseball player, accomplished actor, Homecoming King, class president, and CHS graduate admired by the entire town.

It didn't take long before I realized how ridiculous my pursuit was.

I discovered there was no point in trying to emulate a legend. From then until the present, I have been striving to create my own voice. Not necessarily better or worse than Jimmy's, but my own.

Here I stand in 2003, ironically enough, in the exact same situation:

Eagerly counting down the nanoseconds until my freshman year starts, beading sweat at the thought of trying to get onto the permanent staff of a renowned publication.

In 1999, it was the freshman year of high school and an award-winning town weekly. In 2003, it is the freshman year of college and an award-winning college daily.

The main difference? Thanks to a harem of helping hands, I now feel my voice is ready to be seen in a new setting.

I'd like to, first off, thank my editor, Mike Spellman. I did not, as many joked to me over the past week, pay him to write the column about me in last Thursday's issue. However, he has always given me the proper balance of freedom and creative control in my stories and advice and critiques to improve my work. For three years, he has guided me, starting me off in the abyssal world of journalism with a professional eye.

(While on the editorial note, thank you to Mark Skala, Mary Ford, Andy Mahoney and Brian Brennan for taking a chance on a young kid with no credentials or experience, just a squeaky voice, a mouth full of metal and typing skills comparable to a those of a man wearing boxing gloves.)

I would also like to thank the coaches of Cohasset High School, for never once complaining about my late night, beat-the-deadline house calls, desperate for one final interview before Tuesday at midnight came around.

Tony Rolfe, Ellen Carr, Torin Sweeney, Dave Nigro, Deb Beal and Dennis Walsh were always particularly accommodating in honoring my requests for an interview, and providing me with enough game details so that I could type an adequate piece, sometimes without ever having witnessed the game or match.

Thanks especially to Ron Ford, who wasted many a lunch-break humoring me on the details of any and all things Cohasset sports.

Several student athletes come to mind for much the same reason, always aiding my search for quotes from the players about a variety of Skipper sports. Heather Peraino, Ian Kidder, Jared Krupczak, Ross Lieb-Lappen, Maura O'Brien: Thank you for enabling me to write articles without having A) seen the game itself and/or B) talked to a coach. These students, among others, bailed me out of many journalistic jams with team insights and insider views.

I applaud my parents, mostly for refusing to sugarcoat what they felt about my articles, con-

Rox close in on playoffs

Wild card lead increases to six as Brockton win streak hits five

Nine errors combined was not expected, but a Brockton Rox 9-6 victory over the Elmira Pioneers is exactly what the 2,868 fans in attendance cheered for.

The Berkshire Black Bears dominated the New Jersey Jackals in a 10-1 rout, keeping the Jackals (20-20) 1.5 games ahead of Elmira (18-21) in the race for first place in the South Division. The Rox succeeded, though, in keeping the Pioneers from making up ground in the South Division.

The Quebec Capitales (24-14) also won, so the Rox remain one game behind in the North Division.

If the Jackals win the south division in the second half, a wildcard team would be selected based on best overall record. The Rox lead the wildcard race by six games over the Pioneers.

Rox starter Mike Marchesano wasn't sharp, he gave up eight hits and six runs, only one of which was earned and got his eighth victory of the season.

Leadoff hitter Cleatus Davidson reached on a single, stole second base and reached third on a rare errant throw from Mel Rosario. Two batters later, Rafael Alvarez grounded out to first which scored Davidson.

Brockton tied it in the second inning on a Jake Daubert RBI single, which extended his hitting streak to 12 games. In the third, the first five batters reached base safely and the Pioneers commited three errors in the inning, en route to six Rox runs.

Tony Stutz and Conor Brooks added perfect innings to close the game. Brooks struck out one and got his league-leading nineteenth save.

From the third through fifth innings, the Pioneers committed five errors, which led to five runs.

Elmira starter Hatuey Mendoza was chased from the game after five innings, he allowed eight runs on eight hits and let loose on two wild pitches. With the loss, Mendoza has dropped three straight decisions.

Rox outfielder Darren Blakely underwent a minor surgical procedure to drain his left knee of fluid, which was successful. Blakely was hit by two pitches and walked in an 0-for-2 night with one run scored.

Mel Rosario added his sixth home run of the season to cap the Rox scoring in the seventh.

Craig Lewis, who started at his third different position in the last three games, continued his hot hitting, he went 2-for-5 with an RBI and two runs scored.

Nestor Smith, Francisco Matos, and Jake Daubert contributed with muti-hit games.

The Rox and Pioneers resumed their series in game two last night, with the finale set

More league shuffling on deck?

Almost since news of the break to independence of the Atlantic Coast League and the subsequent disbanding of the Pilgrim Conference came down, it's been heavily speculated and even widely assumed in some circles that Silver Lake would be leaving the Old Colony League next fall to join the newly formed ACL.

Well, you know what they say about folks who assume…

Word on the street now has Silver Lake positioning itself to join the Patriot League in the fall of 2004, when roughly 45 percent of that school's student body will be lost to de-regionalization, i.e. the brand new Pembroke High School. If this does indeed happen, don't be surprised to see a trickle down effect to the South Shore League.

The Pembroke split will reduce Silver Lake's student body to an estimated 1,000 students. Pembroke High will open its doors next fall with approximately 900 students, though word is that number could climb, as Pembroke parents who had problems with the regional school system may now consider switching from private to the public schools.

Informally, Pembroke High has already been accepted by the Patriot League, and Silver Lake may well be looking to follow that lead. In 2004, Silver Lake would likely be among the larger schools (by student population) in the Patriot League or one of the smaller schools in the ACL. Middleboro is currently the largest school in the Patriot League with right around 1,000 students enrolled. SL coaches seem to feel smaller would be better considering their project-involved, but it also means that most teams will be in the hunt each year."

Abington

No other team in the league this year may benefit more from the new league structure than Abington. Coming off an incredible season in which the Green Wave won its second straight league title and won its first ever Super Bowl championship, Abington enters the 2003 season looking to replace nine starters on offense and 10 on defense.

"We are certainly not at the level we were last year," noted Keliher. "However, we play some tough games early, which should be good preparation when we play the teams in our league. The one thing that has carried over for us is the work ethic of the players we have on this team. They work hard everyday and want to get better and improve."

The one area Abington will not have to improve on is at the quarterback position and senior Brian McSharry. McSharry leads an inexperienced, but very talented group of skill position players. Seniors Jeremy Russell, Brian Libby and Chris Kenny, along with juniors Jeremy Iaccobucci and Devin Davis, will all be asked to step in and contribute.

Much of the focus for Abington will fall on the rebuilding of their offensive and defensive line. Returning are seniors Corey Taylor and Joe Hall, but Keliher must find the remaining three or four player to compliment his seniors.

" The one thing we have is good depth with our lineman," acknowledged Keliher. " I feel good about the guys we have in camp and how they are developing with each practice."

The Green Wave and South Shore League's highlight game of the season should fall on week seven when the league favorite Norwell travels to Abington.

Norwell

Of the four schools that finished atop the standings in the South Shore League – league/Super Bowl champion Abington and Hull, Norwell and Cohasset finishing in a second place tie – only Norwell (7-4 overall) has not been decimated by graduation. Abington has lost 15 players from its Super Bowl team to the caps and gowns, including seven of its league high eight all-stars. Hull loses 16, including all five of its all-stars, and Cohasset nine, including all five of its all-stars. The Clippers, conversely, have lost only one all-star among the eight graduating seniors, and will return three league all-stars along with most of their starting lineup on both sides of the ball.

"Norwell definitely looks like they'll have the team to beat in our league next year," conceded Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe. "On paper, they look awfully tough."

Veteran Norwell head coach Jim Sullivan, not surprisingly, is playing things a little closer to the vest. He asserts that a void will be left by each of the eight outgoing seniors, including standouts captains John Chappell (two-time SSL all-star lineman), Matt O'Donnell, Joe Doyle Steve Sullivan (co-starting quarterback).

He also notes: "Winning begets winning. I'm expecting a balanced league, with Abington, Cohasset and Carver all putting good teams on the field again. Once you establish a consistent winning program, like those teams have, kids seem to think they can do almost anything together. It becomes almost self-perpetuating."

But even the ever-conservative coach can't deny what he's got coming back for talent.

Three very big pieces will show up in the form of Andrew Farinick, Frank Granara and John Mohan, all South Shore League all-stars, all vital contributors last fall on both sides of the ball. Farinick rushed for approximately 1,400 yards and was the team's leading tackler from his linebacker position. Granara finished third on the team in tackles from his linebacker spot and was a key contributor offensively, whether he lined up as a wingback or split end. Mohan earned the all-star nod with his work at safety, but he will likely make his greatest impact as the team's full-time quarterback. He split the duty the previous two years with Sullivan, but it's now this gifted athlete's job entirely.

Rounding out the backfield will be bruising sophomore fullback Christian Comeau and slick and speedy junior Greg Thornton.

Though there are some huge shoes to fill up front, senior Dan Dooley (6-1/230) appears ready to shoulder big loads on both sides of the line of scrimmage. Seniors Brian Ware and Andrew Dawson, and junior Adam Nogueira are among those who should compete for expanded roles up front.

Competing for wideout spots will be seniors Terence Bohan, Nick McDonough, Marc Bowman and Sam Chase. All four are quick and athletic. The addition of 6-foot-7 Bowman (returning to the gridiron after concentrating exclusively on basketball last year) adds a dimension the offense lacked a year ago: a natural possession/goal line receiver.

Senior captain Stephen Davis is expected to anchor the Skippers up front this fall.

The Clippers featured one of the top defenses in the South Shore League last year, holding 11 opponents to just 79 points, and Sullivan believes this unit could be even better in 2003.

Ware and Comeau provided a scary preview to SSL rivals of a long term one-two punch at defensive end for the Clippers. Dooley is a lock in the middle, while Dawson and Nogueira will likely vie for time there. The graduations of Doyle and O'Donnell leave holes to fill at linebacker, but Granara and Farinick will be back in the middle to act as principal run stuffers. Bohan and Mohan, who earned a reputation as one of the SSL's hardest open field hitters, will also reprise their roles in the secondary.

The kicking game is, likewise, in good hands (feet?) for the next few years, with Nogueira emerged to do a solid job with the kicking, placekicking and punting duties this fall.

Cohasset

A record of 17-3 over the last two years is something any football program would happily boast, but maybe that's a bit more the case for a school like Cohasset High, which is by far the smallest (in terms of student population) in the South Shore League. The Skippers lost nine players to graduation, all started. This would be a heavy toll on any football program but, again, clearly more so for a school the size of CHS.

Of course, these sound an awful lot like excuses, and Cohasset High head coach Tony Rolfe doesn't like excuses.

"This is something you have to get used to going through as a high school coach," noted the fifth year CHS head man. "Our goal is not to fall off the face of the earth, and still be competitive in every game, and we expect to do that."

While Rolfe concedes that Norwell, given the low number of key graduates, deserves to be viewed as the SSL's favorite this fall, he does assert his team will be getting more than enough back to remain "quite competitive," noting: "We get back 80 percent of our starting offensive line and three starting linebackers Those are two vital areas on both sides of the ball, and there are a lot of teams that won't have that kind of advantage next year."

Two-way starter Cosimo Cambi is the only offensive lineman being lost to the caps and gowns. Returning this fall are junior Matt Casey, sophomore Nick Arment senior Dan Tarpey and senior captain Steve Davis The other captains are quarterback Mike Dooley, lineman Tony Truglia and wideout/cornerback Chris Bilodeau.

Unfortunately, the only incumbent returning behind this offensive line will be sophomore fullback Ted Straughn, and there's no way to sugarcoat the losses of his backfield mates — two-time South Shore League all-star quarterback Mike Snowdale or tailback Braun Goodson, who rushed for over 1,500 yards and 20 touchdowns last season. Straughn (6-1, 195 pounds) ran the ball well in limited opportunities this year, and will likely see that ball carrying role expand significantly next year, possibly even following in the footsteps of Goodson (who converted from fullback to tailback as a senior). At this point, though, it appears there could be several candidates to lug the rock next year.

The quarterback job, though, would appear to rest in the capable hands of Dooley, who led the Skippers to a win in his lone career start as a sophomore in 2001, playing in place of the injured Snowdale. Last year, he started in the defensive backfield, exhibiting athleticism Rolfe sounds excited about bringing to his offensive backfield.

Unfortunately for Dooley he won't have two of Snowdale's top three targets this season. Graduation also claimed wideout John Durkin and SSL all-star tight end Tom Anderson. The situation at receiver may not be quite as dire as it might first appear. Sophomore DJ Silvia emerged as a reliable pass catcher in his first year of football. He'll line up next year opposite 2001 SSL all-star wideout Bilodeau, who was lost all of last season to a broken hand. The favorite to take over Anderson's job at tight end is junior Sean Connelly, a returning starter at defensive end. At 6-foot-4, 200 pounds, he certainly has the size to play the position, and, as witnessed by his play with the varsity basketball team the last two years, he also appears to have the hands necessary for the job.

Though Connelly will be back on the defensive line as well, the Skippers do take a pretty good hit there with the graduations of league all-stars Ben Lynner and Cambi, as well as Nick Spirito. Rolfe generally prefers to keep his number of two-way players to a minimum, but starting offensive linemen Arment, Tarpey and Davis will likely be among the candidates to fill those holes along the D-line next fall.

The return of Bilodeau also helps in the defensive backfield, where Silvia and sophomores Joe Durkin and Joe Kehoe will also vie for time.

Fortunately, the Skippers do get back three players who saw extensive time in the middle of the defense this year in linebackers Truglia, Casey and Straughn.

Carver

Carver is looking to get back to its 2000 season peak, where the Crusaders won the league title and advanced to the Super Bowl. The past two seasons have seen Carver match a 2-8 record, but eight year coach Mike Fraccalossi likes the direction and attitude he sees in his young squad.

"We have a real good nucleus of seniors and juniors returning this year. The guys have come back really focused and are looking to get back into the hunt. Our theme is to work together this year and everyone in the program has embraced that attitude."

The Crusaders will be dumping their traditional wishbone offense this season and introducing the wing-T. Junior quarterback Matt Costello and sophomore running backs Mike Grant and Jeremy Paladino will all be first year starters, but have looked outstanding in practice. Joining them in the backfield will be senior Rob Maltaif and juniors Kurt Peterson and Jordan Fernandes.

"We will be thin on the line if we sustain any injuries, but talent wise we are equal with any team in the league," added Fraccalossi. " I think the league is equal across the board with a good mix of very talented teams."

"Carver is a team that scares the heck out of me," offered Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe. "They return a whole lot of good looking young athletes there. If they can put it all together, they could really be a team to watch out for." something."

Hull

This is expected to be a rebuilding year for the Pirates after the loss of 22 players from last year's 6-4 team, including all five of its league all-stars. In addition, the Pirates lost respected veteran coach John Anderson to retirement. Longtime assistant coach Jerry McGrath takes over, though, so the transition should be relatively seamless.

"I don't think you can ever write Hull off," asserted Cohasset's Rolfe, who has coached his Skippers in five hard fought Thanksgiving Day showdowns versus the Pirates now. "They're just a tough team, always. They were real close in the games they lost last year, so they should be hungry."

Among the few returning starters are linebacker Andrew Riley, deepback Rob D'Angelo and two-way lineman Pat Marron.

Mashpee

Mashpee also gets a new coach, and hopefully that will signal a change in direction for this long moribund program. Falmouth's Steve Femino takes over what was a young, but relatively talented Falcons team in 2002.

Josh Weik (OT), Dan Holt (LB), Shane McDougall (DB) and Mike Field (DB/SE) are returning multiyear starters.

verse to the way I would routinely drench a devastating 12-2 loss with caramel akin to a "solid effort by a rebuilding squad."

Without my parents' constructive views on which journalistic techniques, alliterative phrases, and risky methods were and were not working in particular situations, I am reasonably confident that my writing skills would never have progressed at all similarly to the way (I'm hoping) they did.

Four years. It would be so easy to say "it all flew by so quickly," but that would be lying. There has been more action, athletic achievements, anomalies and oddities over this past quadrennial passing-of-the-journalist ceremony than I could ever have imagined.

I've seen a starting line-up of 11 seniors march deep into the uncharted territory known as playoffs for field hockey. I've also seen a team without any seniors resurrect and pioneer a previously dormant varsity basketball program.

I have witnessed the girls tennis team stomp out their counterparts from Western Mass in the state championship match, and I have cringed as the CHS girls soccer team absorbed its third consecutive season in the SSL basement, then rattle off 10 wins en route to the postseason the next year.

The hockey team set a team record with 22 wins, lost its top seven players to graduations and transfers, and won 22 more the next year.

The football team topped an unbeaten Abington squad to head to its first Super Bowl under Rolfe, only to have the coach meaningfully say he knew the team would reach the pinnacle of the sport, it was just a matter of when.

The wrestling program won the league (6-0 PL) with a sub-500 record (10-11)! Then, they came back in '03 to set a school record for most wins in a regular season (23).

I saw a sophomore pitch a no-hitter in his second varsity start, and a senior pitch a no-no in his second-to-last varsity start within three weeks of each other.

An underclassman led the CHS football team in touchdowns and yardage every year from in 1998-2000; a different senior has rushed for at least 1,400 yards and 12 touchdowns in every year since.

More than my editors, coaches, friends, co-athletes, teammates and family members, muchas gracias Cohasset for this opportunity. Thanks to the small, safe haven provided me in this town, I have seen hundreds of sporting events, written hundreds of articles, and even got to give preferential coverage to my best friends. I now take my leave, prepared to submit my first article to The Crimson within a few weeks, hoping that some ambitious post-Middle Schooler will step up and send that initial, career-altering email to the Mariner.

It's a lot of work, but worth it every step of the way.

More league shuffling on deck?

ed numbers on athletes.

One consideration raised by Silver Lake football coach Dana Battista is that his school has its own vocational program, and students in these programs tend not to engage in team sports.

Whether Silver Lake joins the PL or ACL, or even remains in the OCL, it seems unlikely the six-year Thanksgiving rivalry with perennial OCL champion and Div. 1 Super Bowl contender Bridgewater-Raynham will survive much longer. B-R, which has a student body well in excess of 1,500, has won not only all six Turkey Day showdowns with Silver Lake, but all 22 previous meetings.

Pembroke-Silver Lake seems a natural rivalry given the sizes of the schools, proximity and mutual history. So what would Bridgewater-Raynham do? How's about talking to the folks at East Bridgewater, a school which has not had a Thanksgiving opponent the last several years.

The addition of SL and Pembroke would increase the Patriot League to nine schools. Meanwhile, the PL's old Pilgrim Conference partner league, the smaller South Shore League, has just six schools, with Norton having exited for the Tri-Valley League following the 2001-'02 school year.

Could things be evened up a bit between these two leagues? The two smallest schools in the Patriot League currently, Hanover and East Bridgewater, were both SSL members for many years.

We sure know the folks in Hanover were pretty unhappy about being forced out of the South Shore League when the Pilgrim Conference realigned in 2001, and not just because of their many great longtime rivalries with various Norwell High teams.

Speaking as a fan, it sure would be great to see those always tremendously spirited Thanksgiving games between the Clippers and Indians re-gain the potential to represent more than simple bragging rights. Folks around here have lost count of how many of those 37 classics decided league championships and Super Bowl bids.

Given the recent behavior by several members of our beloved Sox, is it any wonder local ratings were so high for ESPN telecasts of the Saugus Little League team in its run through the Little League World Series?

Amazing how many folks tuned out the Sox, both literally and figuratively, in last Friday's vital showdown with the A's in order to tune into Saugus' instant classic extra innings win over Richmond, Texas, 14-13.

Think Pedro, Todd Jones and Kevin Millar shut up long enough to take note? ...Me neither.

I feel almost silly acknowledging something as obvious as the fact that a professional athlete should never ever complain about his or her hometown fans. Crimminy, even the most pampered, self-entitled of these blessed individuals should realize this.

Hell, what's more basic than not biting the hand that feeds you? How about not champing down on the cash pipeline that keeps you living better than most oil sheiks.

Fans pay outrageous sums for tickets, drop gobs of cash on cheap and virtually useless items simply because it is stamped with their favorite team's logo or favorite athlete's number. I'm guessing, though, that most of said fans don't do so for the honor of being called a dope by said favorite athlete.

As good as these athletes have it, though, too many of them simply can't handle it if the God-like adoration comes with... gulp... expectations.

So, we're too negative, eh Pedro, Kevin and Todd? Well tough...noogies.

Good job, fans. It says here that we booed these millionaires out of their lethargy. Those losses to Oakland last week were two of the most frustrating setbacks in this franchises recent history. And, coming on the heels of poor showings versus Baltimore and Seattle, it further says here the boos and relentless griping were not only your right, but your responsibility as supporters of the team.

And, hey, look at that: it worked out pretty well. The Sox have won five in a row. Looks like these guys can play some pretty good ball when they're PO'd.

So cheer 'em now folks. Don't ever be shy about letting them know exactly how you feel.

Cohasset with previous experience as well as master's degrees, and are both "very enthusiastic" about becoming members of the Osgood community.

She said the two teachers also participated in a mentoring program with curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey.

Over the years, Sheehan said she is continually impressed by the amount of volunteerism shown by parents.

"We have parents offer all the time," said Sheehan, who added that even over the summer, parents would drop their children off for an activity at the school, and would swing by the office to help in any way they can. Sheehan is sure that same spirit will carry over into the school year.

Sheehan said to ensure a smooth year, communication is essential. "We all try to encourage parents to call," she said, noting that communication is necessary at the onset of a problem, rather than later, to try to find a solution as soon as possible. She said parents have been very open with communication to date and the school tries to keep parents as informed as they can through weekly newsletters and their web site.

SCHOOL WORK STAFF PHOTO/ALAN CHAPMAN

Third-grade teacher Kristin O'Sullivan sorts through old books while getting ready for opening day at Osgood School.

Deer Hill

Students at Deer Hill can expect to see a new face in the halls as Principal Keith Gauley joins the staff. Gauley, who had been serving as principal of the Center Elementary School in Abington for the past five years, holds a bachelor of science in human service studies from Cornell University, a master's degree in elementary education from the University of Massachusetts, and principal certification from Bridgewater State College.

In the short time Gauley has been with the school, he has already made revisions to the handbook and sent out a letter to the Deer Hill staff to help all members of the Deer Hill community work collaboratively to make the school a better place. He feels the school should have a common vision that everyone can be involved with and looks forward to meeting with the staff to hear their thoughts.

Arrival time for Deer Hill students is from 8:10-8:20 a.m. The school recommends students be ready at their bus stops around 7:50 a.m. for the first few days as the bus schedule may vary. When the bell rings at 8:35 a.m., students are allowed to enter the building.

A typical day at Deer Hill begins with taking attendance at 8:40, followed by a moment of silence, the pledge of allegiance, and morning announcements. Classes begins at 8:45.

For students buying lunch, hot and cold meals are available for $2.50. Milk may be purchased for children bringing lunch for 40 cents.

CMHS

The beginning of this school year at the middle-senior high school will hold not only a new beginning on the academic calendar, but new facilities and teachers as well.

Principal Michael Jones said he is very excited about what the new year holds for the estimated 580 students who will attend the middle-senior high school.

"We have an excellent program of academic and extracurricular opportunities, a new facility, and a first-rate faculty. I'm looking forward to a year of continued growth in learning." he said.

For students at the middle senior high school, school will begin Wednesday, Sept. 3. Seventh grade students should report to school at 7:20 for a two-hour orientation program. All other students should report to school by 9:20. Buses will begin to run for grade seven students at 6:45, and 8:45 for grades eight through 12. School ends at 2:06.

In light of the construction, students and parents are being asked to follow traffic directions. The student bus drop-off will again be at the rear of the building. Student drop-off by parents will continue in front of the building. Parents should enter on the right side of the driveway in the front, drop off at the top of the driveway and exit down the opposite side. All students dropped off in the front of the building will enter through the main entrance, which is adjacent to the main office.

Among the faces in the halls will be many new faculty members. In the high school, David Ames will teach science and mathematics, Megan Farias will teach Latin and Spanish, and Amy Trask will teach English. In the middle school, Carrie Aronson will be the new guidance counselor; and Jacquelyn Gruosso will teach French and Spanish. In addition, the new middle school instructional aides will be Alexandra Williams and Denise Lopata. Jane Pescatore will be the new secretary to the principal.

Jones said he thinks the strengths of CMHS include the high quality of instruction, the personal attention students receive, and the strong academic curriculum. However, with all the positive aspects of the school, he said the budget is posing many problems, including a need for volunteers.

"We could use parent volunteers to help out in the library," he said.

Despite the tight budget, Jones said there will be some exciting programs happening during the school year, including a two-day Camp Marist retreat for the freshmen class.

Safety tips for school kids

- Students working out a safe route to school with their parents.
- Stay away from parks, vacant lots, fields, and other places where there aren't many people round.
- Walk to and from school with a friend, neighbor, or sibling whenever possible.
- Students should know their home telephone numbers including area code, and their address, parents' work numbers, and the telephone number of another trusted adult.
- Wear a helmet when biking or skating to school, locking bicycles with sturdy locks when leaving them unattended.
- Never talk to strangers or accept rides or gifts from them.
- Students who are home alone after school should check in with a parent or neighbor as soon as he or she walks inside the door.
- Students should let parents and friends know if they're staying late after school.
- Avoid long strings on jackets or backpacks which could get caught on something. Yellow raincoats are discouraged because they are the same color as school buses.
- Cross at crosswalks, looking in all directions before crossing. At signalized crosswalks, cross only on a proper signal, watching out for cars. Avoid crossing between parked cars.
- When there is no sidewalk and it's necessary to walk in the roadway, walk on the left side, facing the traffic.

School bus safety reminders

- Leave home early enough to arrive at the bus stop ahead of time.
- Wait for the bus in a safe place, well off the road. Before walking towards the roadway, wait for the bus to stop and the doors to open.

- Remain seated when the bus is in motion and act in a quiet and orderly manner.
- Keep hands, arms, and heads inside the bus.
- Listen to and follow directions from the bus driver.
- Exit the bus carefully, using the handrail.
- Then schoolchildren should Look!, checking for traffic in all directions.
- Children should never go back to pick up dropped or forgotten items without asking the bus driver first.
- Be courteous to the bus driver and fellow passengers.
- Take the bus and walk to the bus stop to avoid extra traffic resulting from parents driving their children there.

Noted historian, author at historical society October 2 event

Keynote speaker for At the Edge of the Sea, the Cohasset Historical Society's art show/fund raiser is Dr. Edward T. O'Donnell, a professional historian, speaker, professor at Holy Cross, and author of several books including his most recent "Ship Ablaze: The Tragedy of the Steamboat General Slocum." He has long studied and written about Irish history (see his previous book "1001 Things Everyone Should Know About Irish American History"). He has been a commentator on PBS, on ABC, MSG Metro Channels, on radio, and in museums. An historian, a consultant and an author – O'Donnell brings to the society's maritime history event Oct. 2-5 an expertise seldom matched and eagerly awaited.

O'Donnell will speak at the opening reception/dinner on the evening of Oct. 2.

"This is such an exciting time in the Society's history: to have accomplished so much over this past year and to top off the year celebrating 100 years of the Pratt Building, 75 years of the Society, and commemorating the Irish famine ship, the brig St. John. We couldn't pass up this opportunity to launch our inaugural charitable event, even though there is much work still to be done within the Pratt building," said co-president Kathy O'Malley.

"We are both honored and excited to bring together a fabulous speaker and a renowned artist," added co-president Paula Kozol. "We thank Dr. O'Donnell and W. K. Gilbert for distinguishing our signature event."

The dinner/reception will be by invitation only as space is very limited. Tickets are $75 per individual. Call 781-383-1168 to make reservations the Oct. 2 dinner and opening reception.

Cohasset receives child passenger safety grant

The Cohasset Police Department received a $1,000 grant from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau (GHSB) for its child passenger safety (CPS) program. The GHSB, an agency of the Massachusetts Executive Office of Public Safety, awarded 70 CPS grants totaling $116,000 to Massachusetts communities as part of its efforts to educate parents and caregivers about how to protect children through the proper use of safety belts, booster seats and child safety seats in motor vehicles.

"With this GHSB grant, the Cohasset Police Department can better help parents and caregivers protect children from motor vehicle-related fatalities and injuries through the proper use of safety belts, booster seats and child safety seats," said Chief Robert Jackson. "It will also help us to get the word out that the safest place for children 12 and under is properly restrained in the back seat away from air bags."

"Traffic crashes are the leading cause of death nationwide for children ages two to 13. There were nine fatalities and approximately 5,000 injuries involving children 12 and under in Massachusetts in 2001.

"Car seats, when properly installed, reduce the risk of death by 71 percent for infants and 54 percent for toddlers," said Edward A. Flynn, Secretary of Public Safety. "Unfortunately, approximately 95 percent of all child safety seats are installed incorrectly. The Romney-Healey Administrations is please to provide this grant to the Cohasset Police Department to support its efforts to protect children by ensuring they are always properly buckled-up while on the road."

Here is a summary of the Massachusetts CPS Law:

- Children under five years old, and weighting 40 pounds or less, must ride in a federally-approved child safety seat
- Children under five weighing more than 40 pounds must ride in a booster seat
- Children five and older, and weighing more than 40 pounds, must wear a properly-adjusted safety belt. For maximum safety, children 40-80 pounds and under 4' 9 ", should use a booster seat with a safety belt
- This is a primary enforcement law: a police officer may stop a motor vehicle if one or more children are riding improperly restrained. A driver will be fined $25 for each improperly-restrained child.

The Cohasset Police Department wants to remind the public that the Massachusetts Safety Belt Law requires everyone to buckle-up. A 2003 GHSB survey found only a 62 percent safety belt use-rate among front seat occupants of all ages in Massachusetts. "We all need to set a good example for children," said GHSB Executive Director, Nancy J. Luther, "because it's much harder to convince younger people to buckle up when they see so many adults are not using safety belts."

For more information on child safety—including a list of child passenger safety technicians across Massachusetts—please go to www.mass.gov/ghsb.

Meet Rosie

She has a twinkle in her eye, a smile on her lips and autism.

Rosie's family understands that for Rosie, and the more than one million Americans like her who are living with an autism spectrum disorder, research offers hope. That's why they joined forces with 7,000 other people in Boston last year, to raise money for the National Alliance for Autism Research (NAAR), the first organization in the country dedicated to funding and accelerating biomedical research to unlock the mysteries of autism spectrum disorders. To date, NAAR has committed $14.9 million to directly fund autism research - more than any other non-governmental organization in the U.S. Most of the money raised for NAAR comes from the Walk F.A.R. The Gin Blossoms will perform Sept. 12 at Plymouth Memorial Hall.

Reunited and Ready to Rock

Gin Blossoms make tour stop in Plymouth

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The Gin Blossoms are often described as the "happy" or "upbeat" side of the last decade's alternative rock scene.

True, while musically the Gin Blossoms' distinct alt-rock style — combining Byrds-influenced, ringing, melodic guitars with punk-like energy — might seem a lot less dark and gloom-ridden than say, Nirvana or Alice In Chains, those who've followed the band since the early 1990s know that its personal history has not always been a model of happy times.

We're playing some new songs that we have coming out on a new CD later this year. But mostly over this year's tour and last, we're playing the hits, the songs that put us on the map and people know us for. That's the stuff the people pay to hear."

Gin Blossoms Guitarist Jesse Venezuela

The 1992 breakthrough success of the Blossoms' major-label debut New Miserable Experience CD was tainted a year later by the suicide death of original guitarist and key songwriter Doug Hopkins, whose bouts with severe alcoholism and depression had caused him to leave the band before the album was completed. Perhaps the title of the Blossoms' follow up disc, 1996's Congratulations I'm Sorry, was meant to reflect the band's bittersweet fortunes of the time.

However, the new millennium has brought about a confident reunion for the Tempe, Arizona quintet. A tentative series of New Year's Eve and other occa-

New organizers want to roll out red carpet for music awards

By Josh B. Wardrop
STAFF WRITER

Now that the Boston Music Awards are under his auspices, new CEO Chip Rives isn't shy about revealing his grand vision for what the awards should be. "I really feel that the Boston Music Awards should be the local equivalent of the Grammys," says Rives. "They should be a red-carpet event that celebrates the best and brightest of the Boston music scene."

Rives, who made his name in the field of sports management with high profile companies like IMG and Arnold Communications, took ownership of the BMAs and the NEMO Music Showcase and Conference in March from previous organizer Candace Avery. In the five months since then, he and a board of advisors — including industry bigwigs such as Don Law of Clear Channel Entertainment, WBCN Program Director Oedipus and Josiah Spaulding Jr., president and CEO of the Wang Center — have been working to make the BMAs, now in their 16th year of celebrating the best in local and Boston-connected national music, an event to shout about again.

South Shore-based performers The Dave Foley Band and Susan Tedeschi have been nominated for Boston Music Awards. The Dave Foley Band has been nominated as Best Country Act, while Tedeschi is up for Best Blues Act, Best Female Vocalist and her album Walt For Me is up for Best Blues Album and Album of the Year.

"Getting the support of the community and the city behind the BMAs again was key," says Rives. "Now we've got a lot of great people involved with shaping the events, and we moved away from having one radio station sponsoring the event, so it's been opened up to the whole media community."

Rives engineered one major change for the BMAs right off the bat: a change of venue. Instead of the Orpheum, where the awards had been staged for many years, the ceremony will be held at the opulent Wang Theater. "It was really one of the biggest statements we could make," says Rives. "Not that the Orpheum isn't a great venue, but for an event like the BMAs, I really think the Wang is the place."

It won't be the first time the Wang was home to the BMAs. In 1987, the second year of the Awards' existence, original organizers Peter Gold and Avery were approached by Spaulding about holding the event there. "I can remember coming to see all the great performers at the Wang when I was growing up," says Spaulding. "I thought the Awards should be held at a venue that speaks to what Boston is all about — and that's the Wang." Thus began a four-year stint at the Wang, which ended in 1990.

Presenters at this year's ceremony will include hard-rock heroes Godsmack, former Extreme/Van Halen frontman Gary Cherone, Boston Celtics star Walter McCarty and Boston rock legends Charlie Farren and Jon Butcher, with more to be announced. Scheduled performers at the event include Roxbury-born hip-hop artist EDO.G, neo-cabaret duo The Dresden Dolls, bluesman James Montgomery, guitarist Johnny A., rockers Bleu and Rubyhorse, Blue Man Group with guest Tracy Bonham, and a Taylor Family Tribute, featuring appearances by Livingston Taylor, Kate Taylor and The Ben Taylor Band.

Nominees this year include longtime stalwarts such as Aerosmith and James Taylor, young hitmakers like Staind and John Mayer, and rising local bands including Damone, The Gentlemen and Chauncey.

Rives promises some intriguing new visual elements at this year's show, which is being directed by Ron Cameron. "There are going to be lots of video elements, including a film showing a history of the Boston music scene in all its diversity," says Rives. "I think the awards themselves will be a better production than in past years — a little slicker."

Another new development for the Boston Music

Cornell Gunter's Coasters stay true to the originals

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

The Coasters are best-known for songs like "Yakety Yak," "Poison Ivy," "Charlie Brown" and "Love Potion #9," but in these uncertain times the comedians of rock and roll are performing not only those classic doo wop numbers, but also some more serious music in their live shows.

"Not too long ago, we were invited to appear at the official Korean War Anniversary event in Washington, DC and we performed a new number I wrote for the occasion called "Stand Up America," explained Dave Revels, leader of Cornell Gunter's The Coasters by telephone last week.

"I wrote the song to express my point of view on what our country means to me. It expresses a clear belief in freedom, equality and human rights. When it comes right down to it, we're all brothers and we need to leave prejudice and hate behind."

The original anthem will be on the song list when Cornell Gunter's The Coasters are joined by The Platters and Elsbeary Hobbs' The Drifters for concerts Friday, Aug. 30 at the Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis and Saturday, Aug. 31 at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset.

"All three groups come together for a Patriotic finale featuring this song when we perform on the same bill," explains Revels. "It is our way of paying tribute to what America is all about."

What the Coasters have been about since recording their first song "Down to Mexico" in 1956 is the successful blending of catchy music and timeless humor. According to Revels, it is the comedy connection that has kept the Coasters alive on the concert circuit through the departures and deaths of most of the group's founding members.

'With comedy, you can't sleepwalk through the show. You have to know your audience. What we do is more than just a concert. It is really like a party with a lot of audience interaction."

As the group's original members drifted apart, various new incarnations began touring

French potato salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Potato salad is subject to a great deal of abuse at the hands of home cooks. Second-rate potatoes are slathered in mayonnaise and sprinkled with sweet pickles to produce a summer side dish that is ashamed of the potatoes themselves. French potato salad, or potatoes dressed with a simple mustard vinaigrette, takes a modest hands-off approach, allowing the true flavor of the potatoes themselves to shine. The trick is to get the ingredients just right to produce the perfect balance of earthy, sour, salt, sharp and sweet.

There was little surprise when I determined that small red potatoes were best for this recipe. (Russet, all-purpose and Yukon Gold don't hold up as well and I did not like their flavor for this application.) I started with small red potatoes (about the size of golf balls) and tried both boiling and steaming them in slices as well as in wedges. I ended up boiling the potatoes after slicing them into 1/4-inch pieces. By adding 1 tablespoon of salt to six cups of water, boiling allowed me to season the potatoes during cooking, which turned out to be vastly better than simply sprinkling them with salt later (as one would have to do if steaming them).

As for the vinaigrette, I prefer using white balsamic vinegar (now available in most grocery stores) or you can substitute regular white wine vinegar. I kept the ratio of oil to vinegar at about two-and-a-half, a higher ratio that I would use on a green salad. The reason? Potatoes absorb vinegar readily and therefore the higher acidity is fine. The other ingredients worked out to be just a 1/4 teaspoon of Dijon mustard (many recipes use a whopping tablespoon which I find overpowering), a couple of minced shallots, parsley, chives and chervil, basil, tarragon. The key was to pour the vinaigrette over hot potatoes, folding them in with the vinaigrette. The shallots and herbs are added just before serving along with salt and pepper to taste.

FRENCH POTATO SALAD

Cooked potatoes are a good medium for the growth of bacteria, so even though this recipe does not use mayonnaise, do not let the salad sit at room temperature for more than a couple of hours.

2 pounds new red potatoes, about the size of golf balls, scrubbed and cut into 1/4-inch slices

1 tablespoon plus 1/8 teaspoon salt

2 tablespoons white wine or white balsamic vinegar

5 tablespoons best quality olive oil

1/4 teaspoon Dijon mustard

Freshly ground black pepper to taste

2 medium or 1 large shallot, finely chopped, about 3 tablespoons

4 teaspoons finely chopped flat leaf parsley

4 teaspoons finely chopped chives

1 teaspoon finely chopped chervil, basil, or tarragon

Place potatoes and 6 cups of water in a large saucepan over high heat. Add 1 tablespoon salt, reduce heat to maintain a lively simmer, and cook until just tender, about 5 minutes. Drain. Meanwhile, combine remaining 1/4-teaspoon salt and vinegar and whisk briefly to dissolve. Add olive oil, mustard, and pepper and whisk until thick and uniformly colored. Pour over hot potatoes. Using a rubber spatula, gently fold the potatoes and dressing to evenly coat the potatoes. Let potatoes cool slightly to warm or room temperature, folding occasionally. Just before serving, fold in the shallot and herbs. Taste for seasoning, adding salt and pepper as needed.

Serves 4 to 6 as a side dish

GREEN BEAN VARIATION

Substitute 1/2-pound trimmed green beans for 1/2-pound of the potatoes. Cook them along with the potatoes.

CHERRY TOMATO VARIATION

Reduce potatoes to 1 1/2 pounds and add two cups halved grape or cherry tomatoes along with the herbs.

under the name. The group appearing locally this week carries the name of the late Cornell Gunter who joined The Coasters two years after their debut. With the original group until 1961, Gunter created his own touring troupe of Coasters which continues to this day. In 1990, Gunter was shot to death while sitting in his car outside the Lady Luck Casino in Las Vegas where he had been attempting a comeback. The murder has never been solved. Carl Gardner, original lead singer of the first vocal group ever inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, still regularly performs with the only fully sanctioned version of The Coasters. Gardner is not associated with any current or past Gunter incarnations.

Revels is well aware of the legitimacy questions and frequent litigation that have surrounded groups like Cornell Gunter's The Coasters for years.

"I was very fortunate to be able to work with Cornell Gunter for a short time just prior to his death," says Revels who has been performing with his current group for 15 years and was previously with one of the many incarnations of The Drifters. "The key thing to remember is that the original members of most of these groups disbanded early on."

"Whatever the situation and whatever the make up of the group may be, the focus should be on the music, according to Revels. "

You have to be respectful of the legacy. We work very hard to maintain a sound that is respectful of the integrity of The Coasters. The music by Jerry Lieber and Mike Stoller, producers of many of Elvis Presley's biggest hits, is what really matters. We also adhere to the original concept for the group which was comedy. We do everything possible to maintain the sound and format of the original group. We also do several unique new songs, some of which I've written, including "Love Potion #10," which takes up the where the original song left off."

The newer songs may help the performers to stay interested during their 150 live dates each year, but Revels knows that the old hits are what keeps audiences coming back.

"The Coasters have a great song catalogue and that's why we're still in demand. The lyrics are simple, charming, funny and timeless. The music endures, because it tells very simple human stories with great humor."

(The Platters, Elsbeary Hobbs' The Drifters and Cornell Gunter's The Coasters will be at the Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis Aug. 29 and the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset Aug. 30. For tickets and information call 617/931-2787 or visit www.musiccircus.com)

sion dates on the band's home turf finally led to back-to-back, 60-date, national summer tours in 2002 and '03, both of which have generated strong critical and public reviews. Plus, the Blossoms are celebrating the decade anniversary of Experience with a new, expanded 2-CD reissue of the album including bonus tracks, session outtakes and live cuts.

The Gin Blossoms' current summer trek rolls into this vicinity for a concert at Plymouth Memorial Hall Friday, Sept. 12, at 7:30 p.m. The show is presented by local music promoter, Brian Stratton, also a singer and keyboardist whose band, The Infractions with the Happening Horns, has even stepped in to fill the spot as opening act.

Guitarist Jesse Venezuela is another original Blossoms member who, along with lead singer Robin Wilson, has also figured heavily in the band's songwriting from the beginning.

"After we played the reunion shows in 2000 and 2001, we felt as a band that we really liked the way we were clicking onstage. That's when we decided to reunite full-time. We're playing some new songs that we have coming out on a new CD later this year. But mostly over this year's tour and last, we're playing the hits, the songs that put us on the map and people know us for. That's the stuff the people pay to hear," Valenzuela said.

Some of those hits include "Hey Jealousy," "Found Out About You" and "Alison Road" from Experience, "Follow You Down" from Congratulations, and the No. 1 "Til I Hear It From You," penned by Valenzuela and originally issued on the soundtrack of the otherwise forgettable Empire Records movie.

The Blossoms are justly proud of the expanded reissue of Experience, which a decade ago launched the band as one of the first to crossover from the alternative college radio market into the mainstream. Velenzuela also commented on what serious Blossoms fans or record-bin browsers might have noticed over the ten years, that the album has been issued in two different jacket-covers. The most commonly seen one shows a photo of the band members inside a car windshield, the other is adorned with a painting of tall cacti in a desert.

"That was actually the original cover, and I always liked that one better personally," said Valenzuela. "I think it was finally decided at a marketing meeting at our record company to release a few copies of the album in that form. As far as the new expanded reissue material goes, we're happy to finally have that stuff out there for listeners to hear. It was an interesting process to go back and remember some of things that went on behind the scenes in making that album. I really enjoyed it."

(The Gin Blossoms play Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street Saturday, Aug. 12 beginning at 7:30 p.m. For tickets and information call 866-468-7619 or visit ticketweb.com.)

Awards is the establishment of a scholarship fund to be maintained by the proceeds from the ceremony itself. "We're starting a scholarship that will fall under the banner of the 'Young at Art' program at the Wang," says Rives. "Awards will go to aspiring young musicians who are looking to further their musical education. It's important to us that the BMAs be able to give back to the music community in some way."

Even with all the effort and glamour associated with the BMAs, real music junkies might even be more enthusiastic about the accompanying NEMO showcases, which will bring together more than 200 local and national acts for a week of shows and workshops. Rives himself confesses that building up NEMO may be the prospect that excites him the most.

"I've been a huge music fan all my life, to the extent that I've been going down to South by Southwest for 10 years without ever attending a single workshop," laughs Rives, referring to the nationally-renowned week-long music conference/industry showcase that he regards as a blueprint for NEMO. "This year, we've got 23 venues participating in NEMO, and the showcases are going to feature everyone from local acts like Bleu and The Dresden Dolls to national people like Jill Sobule and Glenn Tilbrook.

"The goal, with NEMO, is to make it better for everyone," adds Rives. "For the bands, that means bringing in more industry people to check them out and bigger audiences to play to. To provide better panels with better topics that are really interesting and useful. And for the fans... these are the people who know how great this music community is. We want to give them an eclectic mix of music and an experience that they just won't see every night."

The Boston Music Awards take place Thursday, Sept. 4, at 8 p.m., at the Wang Theater, 270 Tremont St., Boston. Tickets are $28, $43, $48, $63 and $100, and are available through Telecharge at 800-447-7400. The NEMO showcases take place Sept. 5 and 6 at 22 venues in and around Boston and Cambridge — for a complete schedule of performers and venues, visit www.nemoboston.com.

THE EARLIER, THE BETTER

A cochlear implant is a small, complex electronic device that can help provide a sense of sound to a person who is profoundly deaf or severely hard of hearing by compensating for damaged inner-ear parts. According to recent research, early cochlear implants are critical for deaf children to develop neurological pathways needed for hearing response. The study shows that hearing children have rapid development of neurological hearing pathways in response to hearing sound at an early age. There can be similar development in deaf children with cochlear implants if the children receive the implants before they are 42 months old. Early exposure of the nervous system to sound stimulation seems critical to developing the neurological pathway necessary for hearing response.

Our primary mission at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is to help as many people as possible improve their hearing, in whatever way is most appropriate for them. We hope to help the hearing impaired better enjoy the world through advanced technology; education; and friendly, compassionate service. For a knowledgeable understanding of how the body's hearing mechanism works and a deep commitment to knowing what's available today to help each individual's hearing loss, come see us at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. PH:781-337-1144. We offer FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WED., AUGUST 27

A barrage of planetary activity occurs during the next few days. Today the giant planet Jupiter enters Virgo at 5:27 a.m., remaining there until September 2004. In addition, Jupiter prepares to oppose Uranus, making this a period when unexpected opportunities or obstacles may suddenly surface. The moon enters Virgo at 6:27 a.m. and interacts with Jupiter and Uranus this morning. At 1:26 p.m. the sun and moon align at 4-degrees Virgo, and the new moon culminates. A lunar opposition to Mars at 3:35 p.m. warns you to slow down and use extra caution when driving or operating machinery.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 28

Be sure to start this day with a peaceful, positive attitude. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain perspective. The moon travels in Virgo all day. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, begins retrograde travel at 9:42 a.m. Mercury will travel in retrograde motion until September 20, bringing a period to focus on inner, personal growth rather than your external, professional life. A polarity of the sun and Mars warns against taking risks or acting on impulse. The planet Pluto, standing at 17-degrees of Sagittarius, turns direct at 11:34 p.m.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 29

The Virgo moon aligns with Mercury at 3:26 a.m. and becomes inactive. A Libra moon takes over at 9:41 a.m., bringing a focus on key relationships. Although this is not a time to begin new partnerships, it is ideal for repairing and rebuilding relationships that have broken down. Be willing to forgive and forget past hurts. Open your heart to higher visions.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 30

Jupiter opposes Uranus at 12:38 a.m., at the first degree of Virgo/Pisces. The moon continues to travel in Libra, active until 2:37 p.m. A harmonious alignment of Venus to Saturn is a major plus in today's planetary picture. Its influence helps to neutralize the intense energies of the past few days and offers an opportunity to unwind. Spend time with loved ones. Appreciate the positives in your life; friends and family.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 31

An inactive Libra moon can make for a slow start to this day. Relax and enjoy favorite pastimes. Influences begin to turn around at 12:00 p.m., when a passionate Scorpio moon arrives. Lunar alignments to Jupiter and Mars highlight sports and physical activities. Keep it light and go for the good times.

MON., SEPTEMBER 1

Mars and Mercury continue retrograde travel until the end of September. That means that this is a time to pursue personal goals instead of trying to initiate change in your outer, external life. There are likely to be more delays, breakdowns than usual. Sleep on new ideas and don't sign important contracts or make long-term commitments this month.

The moon continues its travel in Scorpio today. People may be quiet, pensive, sensitive. Spend time alone. Nurture your spirit through time spent in meditation, listening to music or enjoying nature.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 2

It may be difficult to get back to business today. Don't get caught up in morning hassles or the blues. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 6:18 a.m., when it aligns with Mercury. A Sagittarius moon arrives at 2:32 p.m., bringing a lighter, brighter mood. However, ninety-degree alignments of the moon to Jupiter and Mars warn you to use common sense and avoid acting on impulse. Take it slow and easy.

WED.., SEPTEMBER 3

The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:34 a.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate next Wednesday, September 10. Get an early start to this day. You can get a lot accomplished in the morning and early afternoon. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. The moon continues to travel in optimistic Sagittarius, and the sun forms a harmonious 60-degree alignment to Saturn at 2:48 p.m. There is one rough spot in effect between 5:55-8:55 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. Keep it light and avoid touchy subjects in this period.

THURS., SEPTEMBER 4

This is a great day for vacationing. If you are working, you must carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. People may be talkative and easily distracted from practical matters. The Sagittarius moon aligns with retrograde Mercury at 7:23 a.m. and becomes inactive. You can make up for lost time after 5:51 p.m., when the moon enters business-oriented Capricorn and forms easy contacts to Uranus, Jupiter and Mars.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5

Challenging alignments of Venus to Pluto and the Capricorn moon to Saturn can make for a rough start to this day. Stop worrying about situations you have no control over. Instead, keep your hands and mind busy with practical matters. Zero in on responsibilities you have take on, promises you have made and follow through. Keep your nose to the grindstone; you can be most productive.

Selectmen want Avalon figures

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen are slated to come before the Zoning Board of Appeals Monday to give their recommendations on the Avalon project, but whether the board will have a recommendation in time is still open for discussion.

As part of the hearing process, the major boards in town have been asked to give their opinions as to whether they think the ZBA should grant or deny a comprehensive permit to the builders of Avalon.

Saying they would like to review more financial information before giving their opinion, Selectmen have asked the ZBA to get as much information as possible for review before Monday's meeting. Selectmen will hold a special meeting of their own Monday, Sept. 8 at 7 p.m. before the ZBA hearing, waiting until the 11th hour to decide what their ultimate recommendation will be.

While the decision whether to issue a comprehensive permit is up to the ZBA, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he thinks the Selectmen's recommendation should hold some weight and Selectmen are taking the matter very seriously.

While Selectmen had previously drafted a list of suggestions and findings regarding the Avalon development, the draft makes no mention of its having too little financial information. Only during the past few weeks has the issue come to the forefront. In light of discussion at the most recent meetings, the

Still the million-dollar king in sale of expensive homes

Though Scituate home fetches highest price

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When it comes to the Cohasset housing market – 1997 seems like the Dark Ages.

That year only one home sold for more than $1 million in Cohasset.

And although Cohasset doesn't hold the distinction of having the top-priced, single-family home sold in the area in 2003 — that credit goes to neighboring Scituate with a $2.8-million home sale — so far in this year, 13 single-family homes sold in town have topped the $1-million-mark.

With 60 single-family houses currently on the market at an average listing of $1,011,281 — there's reason to believe Cohasset's million-dollar home sales will top the benchmark of 19 set in 2002.

"Cohasset has always been the highest-priced town in the area," says David Drinkwater, owner of Grand Gables Realty Group, based in North Scituate. "So much of the market there is high priced and with the size of Cohasset, as a percentage of the market — million-dollar homes are a significant piece of the pie."

The 60 Cohasset homes currently on the market range in asking price from $359,000 for a 1,300 square foot house at 23 Hull St. to a 4,700-square-foot shingle-style Victorian on 1.25 acres at 184 Atlantic Ave. for $3.795 million "that needs renovation," Drinkwater says.

Eileen Corbett of Coldwell Banker says million-dollar homes used to be the exception.

"We used to roll our eyes at $1/2 million," she says. "Now we're not rolling our eyes at $1 million."

Club digs Lightkeepers

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

On a ledge overlooking beautiful Cohasset Harbor, keeping watch over boats passing by, stands the Lightkeepers Residence in all its glory. Surrounded by flowering gardens on every side, the house itself competes with the seascape below.

Soft silvery-green lamb's ear grows low and wide at the feet of light pink roses. Tall lavender Russian sage blows around in the ocean breeze, in contrast to the bright yellow petals of the black eyed susans.

But the gardens wouldn't look as lovely as they do, if it weren't for the help of many volunteers, which include members of the Community Garden Club, who take the time every week to maintain their plantings on the grounds of the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island.

"I garden more here than I do at home," said club co-chairman Barbara Dillon, who has been a member of the club since around 1959 when it began..

"If I could show you pictures of what this looked like before," she said, of grounds that were once overgrown with bamboo, brambles and poison ivy. "It was pretty bad."

But today, through volunteers like Dillon as well as other garden groups in the community, including the Cohasset Garden Club and the Amateur Garden Club, the grounds of the his-

Music Circus poses a tricky case for new smoking bylaw

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

There's nothing ordinary about the South Shore Music Circus – the theater-in-the-round under a big top — has drawn thousands of patrons from the South Shore and beyond for more than 50 years.

In fact, the popular venue started when the dangerous health effects of smoking were unknown and the habit was promoted in feature films by Hollywood stars, some of whom graced the Cohasset stage.

So it should come as no surprise that the Board of Health and officials at the Music Circus are willing to work together to come up with a regulation within the town's tough new smoking bylaw that will suit the unique outdoor situation at the popular location.

Last spring, voters approved a new version of the town's smoking bylaw, making lighting up illegal in all public places and workplaces. The ban also makes it illegal to smoke on restaurant patio areas and within 20 feet of any entrance of a workplace.

"We'll craft a regulation which satisfies both the Music Circus and the Board of Health,"

Open seat on School Committee

Applications for the open seat on the School Committee are being accepted both at both the superintendent's and selectmen's offices until Sept. 16 at 4:30 p.m.. The position became available when Jane Pescatore resigned to accept the position as secretary to CMHS Principal Mike Jones.

Pescatore's replacement will be appointed in a joint meeting by both the Board of Selectmen and School Committee, which will be held Sept. 25 in the Selectmen's meeting room at the Town Hall. Members of the boards have not decided on an interviewing process as of yet, and are waiting to see the number of responses they receive. Members of the Board of Selectmen said they would like to see individual interviews for each applicant, while they said the School Committee seems to be favoring a quicker decision-making process.

Whoever is appointed will serve until the April Town Election. This spring, there will be three school committee positions up for grabs, two for three-year terms and one to fill the remaining year of Pescatore's term.

Interested candidates should forward a letter stating why they would like to fill the position, to the Chairman of the School Committee Rick Flynn via Superintendent Edward Malvey, or the Board of Selectmen via Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Beach issues to be discussed

Issues surrounding Sandy Beach were a hot topic all summer, especially regarding beach stickers. Now that the beach season is coming to a close, Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she, along with Town Manager Mark Haddad and President of the Sandy Beach Association Robin Lawrence, will meet to discuss the many suggestions that have been pouring in from residents throughout the course of the summer.

"We certainly have had a lot," McMorris said of the responses.

Most recently, the issue of beach stickers for visitors has come to the forefront, with residents asking for day passes during extenuating circumstances. Natalie DiMeo-Brandt sent a letter to the selectmen, asking that day passes be made available for residents who have registered cars in Cohasset, and even offered to do the job, should they need someone to handle the paperwork.

Recently, DiMeo-Brandt could have used day passes for relatives visiting from Pennsylvania during their family reunion. Other family members that live in the surrounding area always take turns hosting the out-of-town members at their local beaches, but when it's DiMeo-Brandt's turn, she has no choice but to make two or three trips back and forth to pick up relatives because they can't take the extra cars.

"I get really steamed every year for all the other beaches we visit allow day passes and there is no drama for the day," she said in her letter.

"It seems like a reasonable request," McMorris said, noting that this will be one of the topics discussed at the meeting.

Another request was made by Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, who asked that he be able to purchase a sticker that could be used by guests so they would not have to pay parking fines when going to the beach.

Red Lion Inn patron has ticket complaint

Judith Cellucci, 21 Bates Lane, wrote a letter to Gerd Ordelheide, because she thought he should be notified of what had happened while she was enjoying a meal at his restaurant. She said she found a police officer's "attitude appalling and offensive," after giving her a ticket while she ate dinner with her family.

"Unbeknownst to me while I was relaxing on a Saturday night, one of 'Cohasset's finest' was on a rampage in quiet little Cohasset village. Instead of apprehending criminals he was monitoring the 15-minute parking limit where I had left my car."

She went on to say that her husband saw the officer from the porch of the restaurant and immediately ran over to approach him, so he could move the car, but was told he was too late, there is a 15-minute limit and next, the car would be towed.

Cellucci also said the officer ticketed the cars next to hers, as well as several cars that were not parked correctly, even though they were in spaces and not obstructing other potential vehicles.

"It's not the ticket, it's the attitude," Selectman Tom Callahan said in response to the letter.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he has forwarded the letter to Police Chief Robert Jackson.

Veterans memorial won't be replaced soon

The POW/MIA memorial on the island at the top of Depot Court, which was removed for testing of the proposed bump-outs as part of the revitalization effort of the downtown area, will not be replaced as soon as Selectmen had previously thought. Town Manager Mark Haddad said because it would have to be removed again when the renovations begin, he sees no reason to spend the money now.

"When you do the downtown renovations, it'll go back," he said.

Until the permanent POW/MIA memorial can be built, a temporary one will be installed at the World War I memorial on the Common near St. Stephen's Church.

Water bills easier to read

The Water Commission has changed the format of their water bills that should make them easier to read.

"The new bill format clearly shows how much water you used in gallons, and how much you used for each quarter for the previous year," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "This makes it easier to compare how much water you used in this quarter, and how much you used in the same quarter the previous year."

"This format is a tool to help people reduce their water bill, since it will make it easier to see how the amount of water they use affects the amount of their bill," said Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt. "The first line at the top of the bill shows when readings were taken of the water meter, how much was used in cubic feet and in gallons, and the amount of the bill that was based on the amount of water that was used."

The Water Department sends out Sewer Department bills as well, because sewer bills are based on water consumption. The bills show the water rates and the sewer rates and what the charge is for water consumption and for the quarterly charges for water and sewer, so customers can see the different components of the charges for the bill.

Cohasset water and sewer bills may also be paid electronically, said McNabb, by going to the web site www.mcc.net.

"This new bill format was developed because of comments made by customers and in response to the questions that usually are asked about the bills," said McNabb. "While we offer more information on our bills, we also make it easy for people who just want to know how much they owe and when it is due – that information is highlighted on the bill so it is easier to find."

The bills also include useful information about water conservation (on the back), and the Water Department's one page quarterly newsletter "Your Water Department."

"Let us know if there is any way to further improve these bills," said McNabb. "Call the Water Department at 383-0057 if you have any questions or comments about the new water and sewer bills."

Smoking isn't neighborly at senior housing complex

Second-hand smoke seeps through walls

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Board of Health thinks a volunteer-effort might be a way to solve the smoking dilemma at Harborview apartments off Elm Street, a public housing complex that is run by the Cohasset Housing Authority.

Second-hand smoke coming through the porous walls of a unit has resulted in a lawsuit launched by an adversely affected tenant, the particulars of which the housing authority is not able to discuss.

However, the larger issue of how to protect all tenants from second-hand smoke is one the health board wants to vigorously pursue.

Health Board Chairman Steve Bobo, explained the walls are so permeable in the complex that smoke comes right through, and said "mechanical solutions" are on the table.

"But trying to do something like that would be very expensive," he said. "We might have to get volunteers akin to the ASP program to tighten up those units.

"We could apply for grant money for that," Bobo said. [The Appalachia Service Project is a home building ministry through which Cohasset residents travel south to help with construction efforts].

Judging from a tough new anti-smoking bylaw passed at Town Meeting, Cohasset is doing all it can to become a "smoke-free" town and as Bobo notes – the board wants to protect everyone from the dangerous health effects of second-hand smoke.

Karen Ford, 575 Jerusalem Road, got the ball rolling, so to speak, at Harborview with a letter to the editor in the Aug. 14 Cohasset Mariner. Ford stated she was deeply concerned about a friend who lives in Harborview and hopes "there could be a way the state could make a law that would provide for a section, separate from the rest," so her friend, who has chronic health challenges aggravated by cigarette smoke, wouldn't have to live with it.

After reading the letter, Bobo said the board became concerned about the problem. The board will address the issue with the Cohasset Housing Authority at its Sept. 23 meeting, he said.

"We want to meet to discuss the whole issue and find out what's possible and what's not possible," Bobo said.

Another idea would be to group the smoking apartments together in one cluster. Because apartments are arranged in clusters, it would be easy to delineate which were for smoking and which were not. While it might be an inconvenience for current residents to switch apartments, Bobo thinks those who live next to smokers and have health problems will be much more inconvenienced if nothing is done.

"Even if there's just a little, it stinks," Bobo said about second-hand smoke.

However, attorney for the Housing Authority, Maureen Reilly, who was not able to comment specifically on the lawsuit, said grouping apartments together could be considered an act of discrimination and could potentially cause more legal problems.

That's because the tenants rent the apartments on a first-come, first-served basis, Bobo explained.

"We have to be careful not to violate people's rights," he said.

Whether the smoke from a neighboring unit filters in just a little or a lot is not the issue, Bobo said. At a minimum, he said the smoke creates "a nuisance" for those who do not smoke, that they shouldn't be subjected to.

However, even with the complaint, smoking has not been a huge issue at the complex.

"We've got about four, maybe five out of 64 who smoke," housing authority director Marilyn LeBlanc said. "For the most part, there aren't any."

Cohasset Housing Authority Chairman Nancy Barrett declined to comment, citing the lawsuit.

But long-time member John D. Muncey said the housing authority has installed fans and sealed openings between apartments in an effort to solve the problem.

"We'll be interested in hearing what solutions the Board of Health comes up with," he said.

Free screenings can be an important first step

Health fair has a lot to offer

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"All adults could take advantage."
— Judy Fitzsimmons, public health nurse

When getting a regular check-up at the doctor's office, it's routine practice to have blood pressure, vision and hearing tested. But alternative medical practices are taking off and community health departments are taking notice.

On Tuesday, Sept. 9 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. the Cohasset, Scituate, and Hull boards of health will team up to provide local residents with free health screenings and special demonstrations at the annual Health Fair at the Second Congregational Church next to Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Avenue.

Cohasset public health nurse Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, said the fair has been an annual event for more than 15 years in town, but this will be the first year it will provide services to a wider area. Scituate health nurse Eileen Scottie and Hull health nurse Joyce Sullivan will join Fitzsimmons at the fair.

She said over the years the range of information and services offered has greatly expanded to include "natural healing" alternatives and medical innovations.

Because the fair is held during the day, Fitzsimmons said it is geared toward seniors but is open to everyone.

"All adults could take advantage," she said.

One of the many tests residents can participate in is the skin analyzer, which is a device that — when held up to the skin — gauges the amount of sun damage.

"It's very simple and painless," Fitzsimmons said.

She said last year, analyzers were brought to the local pool and beach so people could look at skin damage on their faces.

"Some were quite good," Fitzsimmons said, adding that regular use of sun block can dramatically help reduce damage to skin. However, many mothers were shocked to find that their children, when tested, already showed signs of skin damage, she said.

Back again this year, the Nikkon Company will conduct demonstrations of magnet therapy. Fitzsimmons said magnet therapy was a bit hit at last year's fair.

Representatives from the Nantasket Therapeutic Massage and Wellness Association will also be on hand to provide massage therapy demonstrations and Scituate chiropractor Dr. Nico Afanasenko of Lewis Family Chiropractic will demonstrate chiropractic techniques.

Cohasset dentist, Dr. Robert Thompson, will provide screenings for oral cancer and nutritionist, Pat Messing, will provide nutritional information and demonstrate water purification methods.

Cohasset resident and avid walker Joe McElroy will also provide information on the health benefits of walking as well as where to find walking trails and other walking activities taking place in the area.

Other screenings will include blood pressure, vision and hearing, cholesterol and blood sugar — all funded by the Cohasset and Scituate Rotary clubs and the Hull Lions Club. The Norwell Visiting Nurses Association will conduct bone mineral density screenings.

Fitzsimmons said the tests are only screenings and do not provide complete information, but can spot something out of the ordinary. The tests can provide the first step, but it is up to the patient to contact their doctor should anything unusual be found, she said..

"This is what health screening is all about," Fitzsimmons said.

All services throughout the day are free, including refreshments provided by Atlantic Bagel, Starbucks, Stop and Shop, and Dunkin' Donuts.

For more information contact Fitzsimmons at 781-383-2210.

said Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo, who added the Music Circus approached the board about the new bylaw.

At the Music Circus no smoking is allowed in the tent.

However, a series of aisles with runways surround the tent and there are also several concession stands, which could leave only the parking lot as a legal place to smoke under the bylaw.

"Obviously we want to protect everyone from second-hand smoke," Bobo said, including workers at the concession stands and those patrons having food or beverage. "But we don't want to arbitrarily make everyone go out into the parking lot.

"I believe we can find locations within the perimeter where smoking can be allowed," he said.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik explained the town's new bylaw is still awaiting the Attorney General's OK and it won't technically go into effect until approval is granted.

"It'll be next season before we see anything," Godzik said, noting the Music Circus has come to the end of its performance season.

"I believe we can find locations within the perimeter where smoking can be allowed."
— Steve Bobo, Board of Health

Godzik said he will return to the Board of Health with a plan after he meets with the general manager, Vince Longo.

"I'm going to meet with Vince Longo and go over some possibilities in terms of what could or could not be done," he said.

Before the bylaw was changed, smoking had been allowed in designated, enclosed areas at workplaces, and enabled restaurants to apply for variances if they could prove banning smoking would be "financially impractical."

Area restaurants such as Atlantica, Koko Island, and the Red Lion Inn applied for variances, and were granted smoking privileges in their bar areas that had special ventilation systems installed. Under the new bylaw, those restaurants will no longer be able to keep their smoking areas once their variances expire in 2005.

The new ordinance has not sat well with Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, who has complained to the Board of Health about not being able to allow smoking in the pool area and porches of his establishment.

Repeated efforts to contact Longo were unsuccessful. He could not be reached for comment by press time.

Volunteer at senior center

The Community Volunteer Program focuses on helping elders remain independent and remain in their homes. The volunteers of all ages help the Cohasset Elder Affairs with a variety of tasks from friendly visiting, telephone reassurance, van escort service and luncheon hostess. The program is designed to match the volunteer to the task and bring pleasure and companionship to both parties.

The volunteers have the ability to meet with, report to, and talk with the Outreach Coordinator, both on a regularly-scheduled basis and at times of the volunteer's choosing.

Call the Council on Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112 for more information.

toric structure are looking great.

Every other Wednesday during prime gardening months, members from the Community Garden Club work on the gardens.

"Then, we go out to lunch, dirty clothes and all," Dillon said. Because the summer months are usually very busy, every other week is a schedule that seems to work for the group, although Dillon comes more often.

"There's always something that needs to be done," she said, whether it's watering, dead-heading flowers or weeding.

Dillon explained all the plants in her club's gardens are chosen carefully to make sure something is always blooming and there is colorful foliage, even during the fall and winter months. She also said the plants need to be hardy to be able to stand up to the various weather conditions that can occur in a coastal environment.

"They are all plants that you can plant near the seaside," she said.

But the plants aren't all just for show either. Because the house sits on a ledge, many plants help stabilize the bank and keep erosion to a minimum. In the "Seaside Garden" which rambles from the front to the sides of the building, wintergreen vine helps hold the soil in place. Under the shade of a giant oak tree, lily of the valley, which started off as a small planting from Dillon's garden at home, has spread far and wide, making a delicate flowering carpet with lush green leaves. Tall, flowing heather reed grass lines the driveway at the bottom of the garden, giving an added dimension of movement and sound to the landscape while anchoring it in place.

In the "Native Plant Garden" in one of the side-yards of the Lightkeepers Residence, more flowers and shrubbery grow abundantly. Purple coneflowers grow near a sassafras tree which will change from green to dark red foliage as autumn progresses. Asters and hybridized golden rod will begin their flowering season in another week or so, just as many other flowers begin to die down.

But the gardens aren't the only projects the club works on. In 1993, members coordinated the building of a stone wall and terrace at the front of the residence, which many guests of Bancroft Hall enjoy during functions. The club also had brick walkways installed around the property.

In addition to their work at the Lightkeepers Residence, the club also volunteers its time at Constitution Park between the Community Center and the Post Office. The club also conducts a house tour during the Christmas season to help raise funds for other projects throughout the year.

This is one in a series of stories on individuals and groups that help keep Cohasset looking beautiful. If you have a suggestion for a story, contact Samantha Brown at (781) 741-2935 or via e-mail at sambrown@cnc.com.

Selectmen to Avalon: Show us the money draft is being amended to include new concerns.

The draft originally said Selectmen had many problems with the proposed development of 200 apartments off Rte. 3A, including the fact that there has not been safe cleanup of hazardous waste on the property; there is inadequate water flow for fire protection purposes; and there should be a larger portion of affordable housing in the development.

Because Avalon is seeking a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, it would be able to skirt the town's zoning regulations in exchange for providing some affordable housing.

"Affordable housing for seniors and otherwise is a major need in the community," the draft reads, adding Selectmen believe a larger portion of affordable housing should be designated for seniors.

The draft also states that "of utmost concern to the Selectmen are the issues of an inadequate wastewater disposal plan and negative fiscal impacts and loss of commercial land, of which the latter two go hand-in-hand."

But members now say the financial information is the most important factor to be addressed in order for them to make their decision, and the Department of Environmental Protection will ultimately make the ruling on the wastewater component, although it is still a concern for the board.

Once it has access to financial information, the board will be able to use it as a negotiating tool, and wonder if the figures they find would allow for developers to build less units on the property, while still remaining a financially feasible endeavor. At this point in time, the board has no concrete financial information to go on, and therefore have no way of knowing exactly how much developers spent to purchase the land, what it will cost for them to build, and how much of a profit will be made.

As someone who works in real estate financial management, Jack Creighton, 23 Cushing Road, said it is the town's responsibility to go over all financial information with a fine tooth comb.

"This is a financial homerun. It's unbelievable how lucrative this would be for them."

— Jack Creighton, 23 Cushing Road

"We've got to get every tiny advantage. We have to be real pain in the neck nit-pickers," he said.

Creighton said developers are going to make a huge profit from the Avalon project and it is in the town's best interest to make sure money spent goes toward what the town wants and needs.

"This is a financial homerun. It's unbelievable how lucrative this would be for them," he said, and it needs to be a positive project for the town as well.

"There's no way they'll do 100 units," said Selectman Tom Callahan, who thinks it is unrealistic to believe the developers would consider down-sizing the project.

"I think we need to take a strong stance," Callahan said, adding he feels any and all information should be made available to the town. "Show us what you've got if you've got nothing to hide."

However, Haddad said members of the Avalon team are "absolutely right" when they say during this stage of the process, they don't need to provide as detailed information as they would during a more final stage and have provided all the required information.

Water quality

Selectmen said they were very concerned about how they could make a recommendation on such an important issue without feeling they have all the facts, and brought up the issue of water quality again, citing the Water Commission's recommendation to deny the plans.

"The Water Commission says you can't build a system that complies," said Fred Koed.

"I recommend we make a motion to deny it based on the wastewater plan," said Merle Brown.

The Water Commission was adamant that the ZBA doesn't have enough detail on how the on-site treatment system would work, and urged the board to deny the permit. The Water Commission is taking a zero-tolerance stance on the issue because the Avalon site, which is on the west side of Route 3A, ultimately drains into Lily Pond, the town's drinking water supply.

"Picture 40,000 gallons a day. If anything goes wrong, it'll all go into Lily Pond," Brown said.

"The water commission has denied it. I don't see that the ZBA has any option other than to deny," said Chairman Ronnie McMorris.

However, Mike Sullivan said he doesn't think the board has enough overall information to make an informed decision and said he would like to confer with counsel to see if the board could ask for a continuation in order to obtain more facts, and have the time for not only the board to look it over, but a professional as well. He worries that making a recommendation to deny the plans would in turn cause the ZBA to deny the plans, which could possibly send Avalon developers running to the state Housing Appeals Committee. When taken to the state level, he worries negotiations between the town and developers could be cut off completely. He said it's possible the Avalon group could provide more information in the future and thinks it's taking a risk to recommend denial.

"Once this leaves the town's hands, there is no incentive or need for Avalon to negotiate with us anymore," said Koed.

"I don't think you can put this off any longer," said Haddad, who said the Avalon developers have made it clear they feel they have provided enough information.

Selectmen will make their final decision Monday, Sept. 8 during their meeting which begins at 7 p.m. and will present their new finalized draft of recommendations to the ZBA at 8:30 p.m. After the presentations, the ZBA will decide to either continue or close the Avalon hearing.

Still the million-dollar king in sale of expensive homes

Hamilton says the million-dollar market isn't just along the Gold Coast, but has spread inland. Four homes selling for more than $1.2 million are under agreement on Ox Pasture Lane; and there are million-plus sales on Cedar Street.

"The perception is Cohasset is the place to live on the South Shore," says Hamilton, whose company has 13 listings currently for over $1.1 million.

The top-priced, single-family home sold so far this year in Cohasset is a 4,100-square-foot home built in the '20s on 1.8 acres at 194 Atlantic Ave. overlooking Little Harbor that fetched $2,525,000.

A total of 68 homes have sold so far this year in Cohasset at an average price of $815,000 – which is more than twice the state average. Homes sold in Massachusetts in July fetched an average price of $387,629, according to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

Last year, at $3.1 million, the highest-priced home sold in Cohasset was a 6,300-square-foot house at 169 Border St. with a view of the Gulf River. Of a total 105 sales in 2002, 19 houses in town sold for more than $1 million. The average sales price was $756,000.

In 2001, 13 homes sold in excess of $1 million out of a total of 82 single-family home sales that year. At $2.1 million, the highest price home was a 2,800-square-foot contemporary at 357 Atlantic Ave. with ocean views. The average sales price in Cohasset that year was $742,000.

In 2000, 11 homes topped the $1-million-mark with nine of those selling for $1.3 million or higher. And 1998 and 1999 there were eight and 11 million-dollar sales, respectively.

So just what makes Cohasset so desirable and pricey?

It's more than location, location, location, says Drinkwater, although the rocky coastline and ocean vistas are a big factor.

"Cohasset is a fabulous place to live," he says. "It has a great school system and a relatively low tax rate and a mix in the population groups.

"It's a forward-thinking community as well," Drinkwater adds, pointing to the town's effort to develop more housing for senior citizens.

With the return of the Greenbush line, towns like Cohasset will be even more desirable for those who commute to Boston but want to live in a town that is "like a resort," he says.

"There are tremendous recreational activities in the Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate area," Drinkwater says.

Corbett sees the job market generated by South Shore Hospital and the redevelopment of the South Weymouth Naval Air Station as keeping Cohasset attractive. She says the lack of buildable land also makes tear downs and additions appealing.

The location is also key, she says.

"It's a wonderful family environment that offers lots of recreation and it's a great place to entertain."

Hamilton says Cohasset's reputation for having a "wonderful sense of community" goes far beyond the South Shore.

"I have clients from the UK and Australia who feel very welcome here," she says.

By the way, the $2.8 million Scituate sale at 20 Wood Island Road has a Cohasset connection. The 5,300-square-foot shingle-style house built in 1996 on six-plus acres sold to a Cohasset couple. It was on the market only two days, Drinkwater said. [The house was briefly rumored to have caught the eye of Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck, who ended up buying a home in Georgia.].

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HELLO COHASSET!

Sadly, summer has come to a quick close although we should see some pretty days in September.(I hope!) I hope the first day of school went well for everyone and that those jitters have all been jittered away for both kids and parents. As you will see from today's column, news, information and events have all been on summer vacation as well. Please make sure to send me in all of your information no later than Mondays at noon and lets get into the swing of fall.

DEAN'S LIST

Cohasset resident Elizabeth Farnham, a Northeastern University student majoring in criminal justice, was recently named to the university's dean list for the spring quarter, 2003, which ended in June.

Elizabeth needed to maintain a quality grade point average of 3.25 or greater to earn this distinction.

FARMER'S MARKET

Don't forget to head down to the Farmers Market this afternoon. This wonderful event is held every Thursday afternoon on the Cohasset Common and a great time is had by all, children and adults alike.

A hair raising experience

Scituate boy makes donation to Locks of Love

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

It wasn't your average back-to-school haircut.

On Tuesday, the day before Nathaniel Norton headed back to class, he went under the scissors for the first time in three years. And it was for a very good cause.

Nathaniel decided to have his long hair cut short and donate it to Locks of Love. It was a decision several years in the making.

The Wampatuck fifth grader, who loves baseball and playing the drums, decided at age 7 to let his hair grow and grow. Through hot summers, wet winters and even baseball games, he kept his blond hair flowing.

This week he kept an appointment at Cohasset's Hair Imports, and had his personal stylist Tara Hayes cut more than 10 inches of his golden mane.

It was the first time a boy had his hair cut for the cause at Hair Imports, Hayes said.

The hair will go directly to the non-profit Locks of Love organization which makes custom-fitted wigs and hairpieces free or at a low-cost to children under 18 suffering from long-term medical hair loss.

This week he kept an appointment at Cohasset's Hair Imports, and had his personal stylist Tara Hayes cut more than 10 inches of his golden mane.

Locks of Love requires that each hair-donation be a minimum of ten inches tip-to-tip, and fashioned in a braid or a ponytail. That was no problem for Nathaniel, who learned off the organization from Hayes, who has been cutting his hair since he was six.

When asked why he decided to donate his hair, Nathaniel's answer was quite simple.

"It's for a good cause," he said.

Nathaniel's mother Linda Norton, said this is typical behavior for her son.

"He's an extraordinary little guy," said Linda. "but he's got a big heart."

The appointment was originally scheduled to take place last week, but Hayes, was away on vacation.

Because Tara is the only one allowed to cut Nathaniel's hair, they simply waited for her to come back.

Last year, Nathaniel attended the Hatherly School, but because of the town-wide redistricting due to the opening of the Jenkins School, Nathaniel now attends the Wampatuck school, where he began the fifth grade this week.

Now that his hair has been cut, it will be sent off to Locks of Love's manufacturing plant in Lake Worth, Florida where each hair-piece is individually assembled out of scores of hair donations. The process can take up to four months to assemble one hair piece.

Since the organization began in 1997, thousands of children have been helped.

For more information on Locks of Love, visit the organization's Web site www.locksoflove.org.

Getting back in gear

While news never takes a hiatus — the quantity of news slows down somewhat over the summer months. That should not be surprising given that town boards don't meet as often, schools are out, and lots of residents go away for a week or two. Other townspeople just like to kick back and relax and not think about "issues" or having to take the kids to dance lessons or hockey practice.

But with September here, that's all about to change.

The town budget season looms on the horizon, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts meet, houses of worship resume their regular schedules, youth sports get into full swing along with myriad other activities for Cohasseters of all ages.

Here at the Mariner, we're pleased to be the vehicle through which our readers either "get the word out" or "find out about" everything from who's on the dean's list to what is the latest news about Greenbush.

But if you're on the delivery end of the news — in other words you want your club announcement or letter-to-the-editor in the paper — there are some simple "rules to follow."

We accept letters, news items and happenings by email, which is one of the most efficient ways to send your news. However, thanks to the recent "worm" when we were up to 1700 emails a day, it's not a bad idea to follow your email up with a telephone call, just to make sure your message arrived safely and wasn't inadvertently deleted. Or better yet, just ask us to hit the reply button — so you'll get the message that we received your email on your computer. Attachments should be saved as word documents; photographs should be sent as jpeg attachments.

We still accept news by fax and the old fashioned way, through the US mail, or dropped off here at the Cohasset Mariner office, 73 South St., in Hingham Square.

News items should be as concise as possible and written in a narrative form. In other words, please write your news items in a "mini-story format" using complete sentences. Try not to send us flyers, which have to be completely reworded.

Here's the scoop on how to get your news in the Journal:

Email: mford@cnc.com

FAX: 781-741-2931

In person: at the Cohasset Mariner office, 73 South St., above From the Hart

Mail: The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043

Sports news email: mspellman@cnc.com

Try to have your news to the Mariner by noon, Monday for that week's issue. We accept obituaries and letters to the editor until noon, Tuesday.

We have forms available for wedding and engagement announcements with complete instructions at the Mariner office.

We welcome news tips and story ideas anytime.

Call Mary Ford, editor, at 781-741-2933; or staff reporter Samantha Brown, at 781-741-2935.

We couldn't do our job without help from the community. So let us hear from you!

A sports tradition

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we've been lucky to have two outstanding CMHS sports reporters over the years. Jim O'Sullivan started writing for us when he was in the middle school and continued until his "retirement" when he went off to college. Jim's successor was Dave Ingber, who also did a superb job for us. Dave has now "retired" from our sports columns as he moves on to Harvard.

The time has come for us to do some recruiting for a new high school sports writer. The pay isn't as great as the intrinsic reward of knowing you've provided some scrapbook material for student athletes.

So if you can write, enjoy sports, are dependable and have access to email — please give sports editor Mike Spellman a call at 781-837-4577 or email him at mspellman@cnc.com

While Jim's and Dave's shoes are hard to fill – we know there is a student or students out there willing to give it a try.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

More questions than answers

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you to the School Committee for responding quickly and publicly to my request that they evaluate the issues surrounding confessed wife-beater Ivan Klimko's continued employment by the Cohasset Public Schools (School Board Backs Malvey's Decision on Business Manager, Aug. 28). As a citizen and parent I am gratified by this demonstration that our town's representatives on the School Committee are responsive to the concerns of their constituents. I am also, however, disappointed by the board's support of a decision that I believe is harmful to our town, our schools, and most importantly, our schoolchildren.

I am puzzled by Chairman Rick Flynn's allusion to "certain things we're not privy to." Massachusetts court rooms are public venues; we are privy to everything that went on Aug. 5 in Hingham District Court where Klimko publicly pled guilty to assault and battery. We are privy to the photographs of the marks Klimko left on his wife's neck and throat. We are privy to Klimko's wife's public testimony that she is physically and emotionally affected by the incident, and that she wants to see him go to jail. Like Flynn, I am uninterested in Klimko's private life. Strangling one's wife, however, is a matter of public concern. Spousal abuse until very recently was mishandled by our society because of the mistaken notion that it was the personal business of a husband whether he beat his wife or not. We know better than that now. We are not prying into issues of Klimko's personal life. We are debating his fitness to serve in our public schools based on his public confession to the crime of assault and battery.

Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts, to whom I am grateful for bringing the matter before the board, notes that the issue is complex in her support of the Superintendent's decision to not fire Klimko. I agree that the issue was complex before Aug. 5, when Klimko's guilt or innocence remained in question. I don't envy the board its responsibility during that time – to protect our schoolchildren from a suspected violent criminal, at perhaps the cost of an innocent man's livelihood and reputation. I feel that they handled that situation well. Klimko's confession simplifies the situation. We have a violent criminal in close proximity to our schoolchildren. There is only one decision.

While I respectfully disagree with Chairman Flynn and Vice Chairman Tebbetts on their reasons for supporting the superintendent's decision in this case, I appreciate and commend their contributing to the debate by offering their reasons. I would like to hear more from member Mark DiGiacomo than the statement of "full support" reported in the Mariner. I would also like to hear from member Pat Martin, who is a professional in the area of domestic violence. Rather than grounds for recusal from this debate, I feel that Martin's expertise would make her the logical spokesperson for the board on this issue.

School Superintendent Malvey also remained effectively silent on the issue. He commented, as reported in the Mariner: "When your school attorney gives you advice, you should take it." This cryptic comment, without elaboration as to the specifics of the attorney's advice, casts more darkness than light on the issues of the debate. Why would an attorney advise a school district to retain a convicted criminal in its employ? What reason could possibly suffice to keep Klimko in our schools' employ, when his conviction on this charge of assault would have made it impossible to hire him in the first place?

Please don't consider this issue closed. I, both as a parent concerned for the safety and well being of my children and as a taxpayer paying for the school attorney's advice, need answers to at least those two questions.

Airplane noise

TO THE EDITOR:

For the past several nights at just after 4 a.m., we have been awakened by airplane noise. A quick look at Massport's airspace monitoring site www4.passur.com/bos.html told me it was an Airbus operated by UPS and that it was flying over Hingham at just over 2000 feet. This is well below FAA standards. Several of our members called the Massport Complaint Line (617-561-3333) as well as the FAA's Regional Noise Complaint Line (Terry Flieger at 781-238-7524) to express their concerns.

Massport has informed the South Shore Jet Pollution Council through Senator Bob Hedlund's office that they get practically no complaints about noise from South Shore communities. While we know this isn't the case, we would like to keep our own records of calls and ask that any citizen who lodges a complaint also inform the Council (SSJPC@comcast.net). Our records will be passed back to Massport and other agencies to demonstrate our concern regarding the noise situation as well as the legitimacy of Massport's figures.

We need every concerned citizen to get involved — it will make a difference.

Trish Hart thanked

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the parents, teachers, administrators and especially the children of the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, we would like to extend our sincerest thanks to Trish Hart, who, during the course of the last two years, has worked tirelessly in the development and execution of the new nursery school playground. The new playground, now finished and installed, is beautiful and will provide the children of our community a safe and nurturing environment to play.

Many people in our community deserve thanks as well for their contribution to the development of the playground. However, Trish's initiative, leadership, energy and dedication were the foundation to its success. As a volunteer herself, she dedicated endless hours to organizing individuals, most of whom were volunteers, soliciting funds and managing the installation process.

When you see Trish around town, please give her the warm thanks she deserves for helping to build a terrific new playground for our children! Additionally if you have not yet visited the new playground at the Community Center, please take the time to stop by and enjoy the beautiful new park.

ZBA should deny Avalon

TO THE EDITOR:

Were there ever any question before, over the last 10 months it has become quite clear that the 200-plus unit AvalonBay project will change the quality of life in Cohasset for the worse. AvalonBay is seeking an exemption from virtually every zoning bylaw Cohasset has ever passed, laws put in place to protect the character and safety of our town.

This has led both the Water Commission and Planning Board to officially request that the ZBA deny the project on grounds of health, safety and environmental concerns. The School Board as well has expressed their concern, as well as the Police and Fire Department who weighed on various matters of public safety and the inadequate town infrastructure for the proposed project's size and location.

Last week AvalonBay presented to the ZBA its latest idea to address the project's sewage problems, with what can only be described as a half-baked plan based on tests conducted 20 years ago. Upon review the Water Commission has again firmly requested a denial, and as of its September 2nd meeting the Board of Selectmen will also be submitting a letter to the ZBA in support of that denial.

With all this evidence that AvalonBay is the wrong way for Cohasset to get the affordable housing it so desperately needs, it was shocking to read in the Globe this past weekend that the ZBA was siding with AvalonBay's attorney against the Water Commission, Cohasset's own town counsel and the many town boards requesting a denial.

It is important to all of us and to the future of Cohasset that we protect our water, our health and safety and our right to build the affordable and senior housing we truly need.

Please join us all for the final ZBA hearing on this project on Monday night, September 8th at Town Hall and let the ZBA and AvalonBay know that this is not the project Cohasset needs!

HEALTH NOTES

Health fair is for one and all

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

For the first time, following a plan to work more closely with our adjoining towns, the Cohasset, Hull and Scituate Boards of Health will offer free health screenings to the residents of the three towns at the annual Health Fair on Tuesday Sept. 9 from 10 am – 2 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church next to the Cohasset Town Hall in Cohasset Village.

This program, sponsored by the Cohasset Board of Health, is an effort for the towns to work more closely to address our mutual health concerns.

This year, in addition to our regular therapies, we are promoting the ultimate therapy; walking. Walking at least two miles a day has well recognized health benefits, and it makes you feel great. Whether you're competitive walker or just a conversational stroller, come down to the Second Congregational Church and talk to Joe McElroy and other fellow walkers about the benefits of walking and, while you're there, pick up some information about walking trails and other walking initiatives in our area.

As discussed in previous Health Notes articles, the screenings include not only conventional medical assessment, but the opportunity to look at other therapies, sometimes defined as accessory or alternative treatment. These treatments are grouped under the title of Holistic medicine or treatment depending on the credentials of the therapist. Many of these techniques will be at the fair. Screenings will include blood pressure, vision and hearing, cholesterol and blood sugar (funded by the Cohasset and Scituate Rotary Clubs and the Hull Lions Club), oral cancer, osteoporosis (bone mineral density) chiropractic and skin analyzer. There will be demonstrations of magnet and massage therapy, holistic health methods including acupuncture, nutrition and water purification methods.

In this time of economic pressure on our health system, boards of health also feel the pinch. The cost of adult vaccine originally paid for by the state, is now partly supported by local boards of health. One reason we have been able to do this is that we receive donations from those who receive the immunizations. The Board of Health has a public health nursing donation fund which we use for health programs and to pay for additional immunizations. The Rotary Club in the past has supported the cholesterol and glucose screenings at our annual health fair. All of the other screenings are provided by the vendors free of charge for the community.

If you would like to consider a gift to the public health nursing donation fund, could be sent to he board of health. If you are inclined to help us in this valuable work, we would welcome your donation to the Public Health Nursing Donation Fund, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Refreshments will be available at the health fair and will be provided by Stop and Shop, Dunkin Donuts and Atlantic Bagel and Starbucks.

For more information contact Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, public health nurse at the Cohasset Board of Health at 781-383-2210.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Clarifying all those train numbers

GREENBUSH VIEW

MARTHA BEWICK

The Community Newspaper group has long provided a forum, open to all, for airing the many contrasting Greenbush points of view. This I value and honor, especially since your newspapers have editorialized often in favor of the train. You provide a unique open door opportunity, which encourages citizens to express their convictions freely. It's rare, these days, and for this privilege I am very grateful.

That being said, I would like to respond to a letter in last week's edition of your newspapers. The letter took issue with my Greenbush View column the week before. I'd reported town meeting votes in "1995," and mentioned that "Cohasset voters also rejected rail — albeit by a narrower margin." I was right. Cohasset voters did in fact reject Greenbush rail by a 52-48 percent vote at their town meeting. But, I was also wrong. The town meeting took place in 1994, not 1995.

I apologize for the wrong date, but am happy to report that the1994 Cohasset town meeting vote, like the Hingham and Scituate town meeting vote, was a good hearty anti-train vote, not a thin margin of 3 pro-train votes, like the Cohasset referendum in 1995! So, my honorable critics were partially correct, and I was also partially correct. I win on substance, they win on date.

Further, I was puzzled to read the reported results of the 1995 Cohasset referendum, "1,329 voters said they'd use the train to commute if such a service was available." The 1990 census reported only 907 commuters to Boston/Cambridge from Cohasset. MBTA figures indicate even fewer commuters to Boston/Cambridge (871) at that time. Preliminary transportation figures from the 2000 census are just coming out. They show that Cohasset's work force has declined in number by 6 percent. It difficult to see, therefore, how there are 1,329 from Cohasset who would use the train to commute to Boston.

Speaking of numbers, here are some to consider. Did you know that almost 60 percent of Cohasset's commuters to downtown Boston already took public transit to work in 1990, probably boats, buses and the Red Line? (The 2000 census numbers on journey to work haven't been reported yet.) But, the MBTA's objective, outlined in its Final Environmental Impact Report, is to get 35 percent of the Greenbush corridor onto public transit to Boston after the investment of $470 million of state dollars on the train project. We know from preliminary 2000 census figures that Hingham's percentage of transit riders townwide increased 35 percent, and is higher than many towns which already have commuter rail, like Concord and Winchester.

The question that comes to mind is why is the train being built at all, if great portions of our corridor already exceed the MBTA transit objectives? Why not augment and improve what seems to be producing good results already, rather than squeeze bus and boat services with 100 percent fare and fee increases (ferry), and payouts for loss of business to the Old Colony (private buses)?

In response to the paragraph reporting the recent South Shore Chamber survey results, it would certainly be useful to know what was asked in that survey, how the survey territory was determined, and how the 400 questions were distributed among impacted and non-impacted Greenbush communities. We have heard that there was great pro-train support in Weymouth, for instance. But only part of Weymouth is in the Greenbush corridor. Was the survey conducted town-wide, or limited to the appropriate section of Weymouth? Why wasn't Braintree included in the survey? A part of Braintree is in the Greenbush corridor.

Were those surveyed offered a set of alternatives to the train to choose from? Were Hull residents offered an option of additional ferry service from Pemberton Point and Nantasket instead of a train, for instance? Direct and frequent service from Pemberton Point would get commuters on a fast ferry into Long Wharf in downtown Boston in 20 minutes. It's difficult to believe that Hull Village residents would choose a train which takes 39 minutes from Nantasket Junction to South Station, with a connecting drive of more than 10 minutes, over frequent and express ferry service. For many years, I have believed that Hull had the potential to be what Sausalito and Tiburon are to San Francisco, with their frequent and direct over-the-water links to Boston. We believe, that, given the option, South Shore residents might prefer frequent, low-cost, and low-impact alternatives, such as buses and boats.

Finally, some Greenbush corridor residents may say they want to take the train to get to Boston for special events. There are options to the train which are even more direct. The Fleet Center is close to the Harbor Express ferry terminal at Long Wharf, an easier walk than South Station. If there were shuttles to Boston and Cambridge locations from the South Shore's downtown ferry docks, as there are in New York City, in San Francisco, and in Seattle, there would be easy transit connections to Boston destinations as well.

For those attending or wishing to attend Friday afternoon Symphony concerts, there is an excellent South Shore Boston Symphony bus, which goes every Friday morning a concert is scheduled, and makes stops along Rte. 3, including the free Rockland park and ride lot. Unlike the T, where you'd have to transfer from the train to the Red Line at South Station, and then to the Green Line at Park Street, the Symphony bus takes you directly to Symphony Hall, and then on to the Museum of Fine Arts, back to Symphony, and home again after the concert. It is organized by Marsha Klein of Scituate, who is looking for new subscribers. Give her a call!

Yes, Virginia, there are alternatives. Let's make them work.

Martha A. R. Bewick is a member of Advocates for Transportation Alternatives.

When women outnumber men

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Once again it has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt that I was born much too soon.

When I was learning my sums, as Miss Waldron used to put it, the electronic adding machine was still a curiosity in a lab at MIT. I had to learn by actually adding on a piece of paper. Let's see, two plus two is five. Or maybe four. Hold on a minute while I check it on my computer.

I never saw a television set until I was in my mid-twenties and Fat Key invited me over to his house on West Street to watch the Louis-Walcott championship fight. Before that, we had to wait for the next day's Record American to see what Louis looked like when he KO'd Schmeling.

And, now, just the other day, I learned that men are hopelessly outnumbered by women at the nation's colleges. There are, by the count of the U. S. Department of Education, 128 women — or girls, as we used to call them — to every 100 men enrolled in a degree-granting college. I don't know what to make of that now but 50 years ago it would have been called progress.

I don't know what the count was when I stalked the halls of Boston University but nubile young ladies — or coeds, as we used to call them— were something of a rarity. Oh, I managed to find one to take to the prom but I had to take classes at the College of Practical Arts and Letters, BU's all-girls school, to do it.

I remember my first day in class at PAL when the eminent Shakespearean scholar Dr. Harold Ogden White asked me: "Are you in this class or are you just shopping around?" If that was two questions, I could have answered "Yes," to both of them.

When Dr. John Silber, who is either president, chancellor or just another guy around BU right now, discovered a year or so ago that women outnumbered men on the campus he pronounced it a distraction for men students, probably plotted by the American Association of University Women.

If it is a ploy by the AAUW, then they've lost touch with the average coed, who is in college to seek out the man who will become a lawyer or a doctor or a Bill Gates-clone and take care of her for the rest of her life. Some are even willing to learn to cook for him. At least, that's how it was 50 years ago.

Maybe it's turned around now. The Boston Herald quotes student Fran Fincke, who calls himself "BU cute," as saying the overwhelming presence of coeds — oops, women — influenced his choice of school.

"It just makes dating easier," he said.

Right on, Fran, and that comes from an old timer who never had it so good.

LIBRARY CORNER

Plein air paintings by Kimberlee Alemian

The Paul Pratt Library is hosting an exhibition of plein air oil paintings by artist Kimberlee C. Alemian of Cohasset in the Meeting Room Gallery at the Paul Pratt Library, 35 Ripley Road, through Oct. 29. Opening Reception: Sept. 10, 5-7 p.m.

. This body of work explores the theme of the changing coastal environment. For the past two years, Alemian has been painting scenes of the ledge and sensitive marsh areas along the South Shore. Some of the works also include architecture characteristic of coastal living. The paintings depict a strong sense of place and respond to both the beauty of nature and man's power to be a creator of places. All of the works were painted on location at various times of day studying conditions that affect coastal light and atmosphere.

Alemian's award-winning work has been included in selected exhibitions throughout New England and in a number of private and corporate collections. Her painting experience includes a BFA in painting from Mass College of Art, an MFA in painting from Boston University as well as study with Graham Nickson at the New York Studio School of Drawing , Painting and Sculpture. Alemian is a Gallery Artist of the South Shore Art Center. For more information call the South Shore Art Center, 781-383-ARTS.

ON THE BRIGHT SIDE

JEANE DALY

I'm one of those people who never win anything, but always buy the 10 raffle tickets, just in case.

Much too early one Saturday morning the front door bell bonged several times. Thinking it might be another one of the kids wanting to move back home, I chose to ignore the bong, and scuffed back to the kitchen for a second cup of coffee. After several more bongs, curiosity got the better of me. There on the front stoop, clutching a gold envelope in both hands, stood a Cub Scout in full uniform.

"You had a lucky raffle ticket and won this," he said, slapping the envelope in my hand. "Mom said it's the second prize. Bye," he called, hurrying to the waiting car parked in the driveway.

Back inside, I opened the envelope and found a gift certificate for a Day of Beauty at the exclusive Bronze Door Spa in western Massachusetts. I couldn't believe it, an entire day to myself. Thrilled beyond words, I tucked the gift certificate away for that day I'd really appreciate some pampering and spoiling. Several months later, almost at the breaking point, with kids moving in, middle-aged folks moving out and then in again with their kids.

From one parent to another, it's not easy.

Over breakfast one morning, I noticed my five-year-old granddaughter Emily, intently studying my face.

"Grammy can Patty and I use your face to play tic-tac-toe on?"

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"You know Grammy, tic-tac-toe. Look in the mirror, you can see the lines are already there," she said happily, while I mentally wrote her out of the will.

That was the breaking point, the appointment was made, the body, mind, and spirit could hardly wait for The Day of Beauty!

The morning of the appointment I showered, powdered, pedicured, and manicured. After all, how often does one enter The Bronze Door Spa?

Arlette, a stunning woman, who spoke with a beautiful French accent, personally greeted each client as they came through the doors. I followed her down a thickly carpeted corridor to the locker room, then to an elaborate dressing room with gold-paneled showers. Eager to get started, I undressed and put on a gorgeous plush white robe: the facial was first.

Arlette led the way down a lavender-scented hall to meet Ulan, the facial expert. Carefully, Ulan wrapped a towel around my head, which by the way, kept slipping off. She proceeded to cream, slough, roll, and steam the entire face. I was clueless to the methods of extraditing blackheads from the three layers of tissue on a living person until her 10-inch nails, that resembled screwdrivers, headed for my face. After the wailing had ceased, more cream and steam was applied. Fingers fluttered over the bright, shiny skin and the torture came to an end.

Handing her a tip from my fanny pack, I was ushered back to the dressing room where I removed the towel from my head. Quickly realizing, the hair-do had done-gone away.

Next came the body massage. Wrapped in a white towel trimmed with gold, I crawled on all fours onto the massage table.

Jennata, the masseuse, asked if there were any trouble areas to be worked on. Being a Type A personality, I opted to have the neck and upper back massaged. Unaware there were different types of body massages, I soon got the message that Jennata's specialty worked to alleviate knots, no matter how deep. Her specialty was referred to as down, and dirty massage. In the laywomen's terms that meant, I hate you! Using only her elbows, furiously she pressed into muscles, deeper and deeper, the sounds of ribs splintering was her cue to stop. She was silent as she went about her work. The only sounds in the room were my grunts and groans.

Next, her strong hands played tug-of-war with my neck, twisting and yanking, until I thought my head would roll-off.

"Why so tense, dahlink?" she asked smirking.

Hallelujah! It was over. Handing her a tip, I limped out of the room.

Showering, then dressing, I glanced in the gold-trimmed mirror and stared at the unfamiliar face that blankly looked back. Swollen and bruised, I resembled Mike Tyson on one of his good days. Attempting to comb my hair, it refused to return to the blast-off site and stuck out like spears.

Julita, the pedicurist, removed the gold slippers and tucked my footsies into a whirlpool basin filled with rose pedals. Delicious, indeed.

After a few minutes, she eased each foot from the water, dried and carefully examined each one. "Oh, my lord!" she shrieked. People came running from all directions to find out what was wrong.

"Whatever happened to your toes? Did a truck run over them?"

The crowd crooned, "Poor thing."

I've never noticed anything unusual about my toes before, but these gnarled hideous things at the end of my feet needed to be covered by socks for the rest of my life. Grateful that that scene was over, I handed Julita her tip and was met by my manicurist.

Jasmine held my hands in hers and studied them. "To bad about all the liver spots, darling. I'm sure I have the perfect concealer for those ugly things. It's inexpensive, only $45, plus tax, but well worth it." The word commission leaped to mind. After soaking my hands in liquid soap she had me select a shade of polish for my nails. After a few minutes I made my selection and handed her a coral colored polish. Glancing at the color I'd handed her, Jasmine put her nose close to mine and asked if I were color blind.

"You're a pink person, it has to be in the pink family," she said, pouting.

She selected a hot fuschia and gave me a pathetic look.

At this point, I would've left with paper bags on my hands. Glancing at the clock, I was surprised to see four hours had already passed. Tired and hungry, I longed for this experience to be over. Fried bologna sandwiches heaped with mustard danced before my eyes. My hands trembled as I handed Jasmine her tip.

The Day of Beauty left me feeling like a pathetic liver-spotted hag, with deformed feet and ugly hands. After all that, what I'd consider a day of beauty would be an empty house, phone unplugged, a long hot bubble bath, and a three-hour nap. And, of course, no tipping.

No tears shed over prison slaying of defrocked priest

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL C. LEVENSON

There is an axiom of politics that it often takes a tragedy to spur change. But the prison slaying last week of defrocked priest John Geoghan was no ordinary tragedy — Bishop Sean O'Malley called it a tragic end to a tragic life — and the political response in Massachusetts has been ambivalent.

Politicians at the Statehouse, like members of any community, often act decisively when there is an immediate consensus after a tragedy that something must be done to correct an injustice, close a loophole in the law, or rectify the malfeasance of a trusted institution.

Geoghan's death has lit up talk show phone lines and generated headlines. But the killing of a despised former priest accused of nearly 150 counts of child molestation has not produced the clear sense of outrage that made other high-profile murders such powerful catalysts for changes in public policy.

Strangled and beaten by a fellow inmate who had a known history of anti-Semitism and gay bashing, Geoghan's death was shocking, but his killing was not mourned. It may be "the least sympathetic murder in state history," in the words of one lawmaker. Silences can be telling, and the hushed response from most in the state speaks to the unease many feel in making sense of the murder.

While no one has publicly celebrated his death, and most publicly denounced it as an affront to the justice system, few tears were shed for Geoghan. A few alleged victims cheered his demise, although most said they would have preferred to see him serve his time and face the many charges still pending against him.

Critics might interpret the tepid reaction as a tacit acknowledgement that Geoghan "got what he deserved." The governor, for his part, has been unequivocal in his declaration that convicts are sent to prison to serve their time, not to suffer arbitrary punishments handed down by other convicts or guards on their cellblock. He appointed a task force to look into changes in prison policies.

"People who have been incarcerated are there to be punished and then ultimately in most cases to be released and we should have them safe and sound," Romney said. "And there's clearly a failure of government if that's not the case in any one of those settings."

A few political leaders did see in Geoghan's murder motivation for change, but few of the ideas seemed to take hold. State Sen. Guy Glodis, D-Worcester, filed a new bill to reinstate the death penalty for inmates who murder in prison. Reporters covered the story, but his legislation didn't seem to gain much momentum. Corrections officers' unions said staffing levels at prisons had to be increased.

Alleged victims, who had the strongest reaction to Geoghan's death, said it was an outrage that his criminal record may be wiped clean because he died while his conviction was on appeal. But no bill has yet been filed to overturn the due process provision, and the loudest calls for change came from outside Beacon Hill, led by the victims and Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating.

Contrast the past week to the weeks following the murders of sympathetic figures in recent history. The pain and shock of those cases pushed lawmakers and the public to rally around a cause and look more closely at making changes in state policy. In those cases, a movement for change appeared where none was evident before.

The death of Jeffrey Curley, for example, galvanized pro-death penalty forces, who nearly reinstated capital punishment by the slimmest of margins. The slaying of Alexandra Zapp at a highway rest stop spurred a move to toughen the state's civil commitment law, which allows sexual predators to be held behind bars after their prison sentences expire. The mail bombing of Sandra Berfield by an obsessed handyman motivated passage of a bill toughening the state's anti-stalking laws. And most recently, lobbying by the Bish family, whose young daughter's bones were recently found in a wooded area, stirred the advancement of legislation to expand the state's DNA database.

Critics might interpret the tepid reaction as a tacit acknowledgement that Geoghan "got what he deserved."

With Geoghan, the question of where the state heads now is unclear. That does not mean that lessons for changes in state policy may not present themselves over time.

Romney's investigation is underway and what it turns up, according to some experts in criminology, will not be a surprise, and will not be easy to fix. Prisons are violent places, and convicted child molesters occupy the lowest rung on the inmate hierarchy. They are often subject to intimidation, harassment, or worse, said Dr. Stephen Richards, a professor at Northern Kentucky State University.

This is a festering reality that has long been known to corrections officials across the US, he said. Richards, now a criminologist, spent nine years in federal prison for selling marijuana and is co-author of the grim guide to prison life "Behind Bars: Surviving Prison."

"This was very predictable," he said of Geoghan's death. "My guess is that the prisoners were taking bets on how long he would live." He added, "In general across the country, the public is unaware of the level of violence in the prison system and, across the country, state authorities go to great lengths to cover up the number of murders, rapes, and beatings."

Romney's Public Safety Secretary, Edward Flynn, pledged that would not be the case. He said officials would "not immediately leap out in defense of the status quo" as the investigation proceeds.

"We are going to do the best way we can to examine this as closely as we can, and have as transparent a process as we can, so that when our results are published, you have some confidence that there was no attempt here to hide from the truth, to cover up, or to make excuses," Flynn said.

• Romney open to changes in workforce diversity plan — Facing criticism from Boston City Councilor Charles Turner and others, the governor touted his record of hiring minorities and agreed to entertain changes to the diversity policy he issued in June by executive order. Romney revoked seven previous affirmative action orders and replaced them with a single order that he said will make the state's workforce more diverse. Critics said the new order lacks the punitive measures and enforcement mechanisms needed to ensure diversity. Romney was expected to appoint members of a promised 15-member Diversity and Equal Opportunity Advisory Council this week.

• Industry increase in auto insurance criticized — A 12 percent hike in auto insurance rates requested by industry leaders seemed unlikely after a public hearing, where state officials called the increase "excessive" and "unjustified." Massachusetts is the only state whose rates are set by an appointed insurance commissioner. Aides to Attorney General Thomas Reilly said he is interested in exploring a competitive insurance market. The insurance commissioner, Julianne Bowler, recently ruled a competitive market inadvisable at this time. Bowler must issue a new insurance rate, effective Jan. 1, 2004, by Dec. 15.

• Prescription advantage extended, under compromise — After initially blocking moves to extend enrollment because of concerns over cost, House Republicans reached a compromise with Democrats that would reopen enrollment in the Prescription Advantage program in January, with one significant proviso. The administration must certify by Dec. 1 that funds are available to expand enrollment. The plan is on the governor's desk.

• Civil services commissioner resigns — The state civil service commissioner, William Monahan, resigned last Friday, the Boston Globe reported. Its reporters had been inquiring about Monahan's business dealing with Boston Mafia boss Gennaro Angiulo. The gubernatorial appointment faced criticism from the start. The governor has called the agency antiquated and said it should be abolished.

POLITICAL NOTES

Two-quotes would help eliminate waste

State Sen. Robert Hedlund,R-Weymouth, has co-sponsored legislation, which will require state departments to solicit at least two quotes for state-funded private contracts and contract renewals prior to awarding them. This bill is being introduced as a means of providing a system of checks and balances to ensure taxpayer money is not being wasted.

"By making certain that we are receiving the best possible price on goods and services purchased, this legislation is a common sense approach to saving taxpayer dollars," Hedlund said. "If passed, this bill has the potential to eliminate thousands of dollars worth of waste in state government."

This legislation will only apply to contracts in excess of $50,000, and is currently in the House Committee on Rules.

Bradley backs Gov on bilingual education

Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, recently voted to sustain the Governor's veto of legislative changes to the state's new bilingual education law. The law was approved by an overwhelmingly number of voters last fall. The new law mandates that students be given no more than one year of bilingual education, thereby expediting the process of learning English. Unfortunately, the legislature approved changes to this law in the 2004 budget, Bradley said. The Governor then vetoed these changes.

"I voted with the Governor to uphold the will of the voters because they stated decisively that Massachusetts should have English immersion after one year of bilingual education," Bradley said. "To change this so soon after voters approved it gives the impression that the legislature knows better than the people."

Beacon Hill Roll Call

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week. This week, BHRC reports local senators' roll call attendance records for the 2003 session through August 29, 2003.

The Senate has held 325 roll call votes. BHRC tabulates the number of roll calls on which each senator was present and voting and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total roll call votes held. That percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record. Sixteen of the state's 40 senators have a 100 percent roll call attendance record.

The top five worst roll call attendance records belong to Sen. Susan Fargo (D-Lincoln) who missed 113 roll calls resulting in an 65.2 percent roll call attendance record; Sen. Andrea Nuciforo (D-Pittsfield) who missed 94 roll calls (71.0 percent roll call attendance record); Sen. Marian Walsh (D-West Roxbury) who missed 47 roll calls (85.5 percent roll call attendance record); Sen. Robert Antonioni (D-Leominster) who missed 34 roll calls (89.5 percent roll call attendance record) and Sen. Richard Tisei (R-Wakefield) who missed 31 roll calls (90.4 percent roll call attendance record).

LOCAL SENATORS' ATTENDANCE RECORDS

The percentage listed next to the senator's name is the percentage of roll call votes for which the senator was present and voting. The number in parentheses represents the number of roll calls the senator missed.

New school year, new building, new principal

Gauley joins Deer Hill staff

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

There is already one student who has spent some time in the principal's office at Deer Hill. Fortunately for him, he's not in trouble, he's just spending some time with dad.

New principal Keith Gauley spent many hours in the halls of Deer Hill, even before the students arrived. When his son Ryan's school didn't open on schedule, they took that as an opportunity to spend a little more quality time together on a Friday afternoon before the daily grind begins again and Ryan heads off to the fifth grade.

For Gauley, whose other son, Benjamin, will begin eighth grade this year, having the opportunity to be able to work with children who are roughly the same ages as his sons couldn't be a better fit.

"I've lived the school years of these children the past five years. It's easy to connect," he said.

While Gauley said he has only met a few students over the summer, he said he is very excited to get to know each and every student on a personal level and learn what their interests and personalities are like.

"I intentionally went to the first performance of 'Jack Beanstalk,'" he said, and was delighted with what he saw from the students performing in the summer drama workshop production, which was held in the new Deer Hill auditorium.

Gauley said he is very excited to be able to work in new facilities. "You're stepping right into a brand new building. It's a wonderful opportunity to have the facilities and technology and space," he said, adding that it's nice to have separate rooms for each specialist where some other schools have their specialists travel around to the different classrooms.

Even though Gauley seems to have found the perfect fit in his new role, working with children isn't what he had envisioned when he chose a major at college. Initially, he enrolled at Cornell University looking to become an architect, but quickly changed his mind to engineering, because of his interest in math and science. However, the program still wasn't fulfilling what he envisioned for his career. Deciding to pursue teaching, he switched his major again, this time to human service studies because the school didn't have a teaching program, and knew it was the right path to follow.

Keith Gauley takes over the reins at Deer Hill.

"The irony is, people always saw it," said Gauley, adding that when he began teaching, he worked alongside many of his former teachers, who said they always knew he would fall into a career working with children.

Aside from his serving as a principal Gauley said he is as a referee and coach for various sports teams, which gives him an opportunity to work with children "in a more relaxed environment." He has coached both basketball and baseball in his hometown of Plympton.

Gauley also works with children over the summer as the assistant director for the Cape Cod Sea Camps in Brewster where he has been a part of the staff there since 1996.

Aside from his getting to know the students, Gauley is excited about the prospects the new school year brings. He has already met with parents and teachers to get feedback on what they see as the positives of the school, and what needs to be changed to make the school even better.

"It's great to hear great things," he said, adding how much he appreciates people taking the time to voice concerns regarding areas that need to be worked on.

Because of his five years previous experience serving as principal for Center Elementary School in Abington, Gauley said the transition into his new role has been much easier than if it had been his first year. Because matters of protocol such as scheduling and other policy issues are old hat for him, he is able to "approach things head on."

Gauley will be replacing former principal Paul Callahan who served as principal at Deer Hill for seven years. Supt. Edward Malvey has spoken very highly of Gauley throughout the entire selection process, saying he is confident in Gauley's ability to take over the position.

In an interview at the school last week, Gauley said he is looking forward to the start of school but, "The nerves are always there on the first day," he said. However, nerves aside, Gauley said he is really looking forward to meeting the students who will no doubt be "bright-eyed and well dressed on that first day," as they always are.

What is that?

NOAA ship Thomas Jefferson makes residents wonder

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Among the usual lobster and pleasure boats, which regularly cruise the waters off the coast of Cohasset, was an unfamiliar sight last week, as the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, or NOAA, had anchored one of its ships, the Thomas Jefferson, to conduct surveys of the sea floor.

Harbormaster John Muncey said he had received some calls about the craft by concerned residents wondering what it was doing.

"It was just on the other side of Sandy Beach," said Muncey, who added that people had reported seeing the ship from Jerusalem Road.

LCDR Donald Haines, Commanding Officer of the Thomas Jefferson, said during the past couple of weeks, his ship has been using sonar equipment to survey the bottom of the ocean floor. The ship has been determining water depths and locating underwater obstructions and any other objects that would pose a danger to navigation. Information acquired by the Thomas Jefferson and ships like it, will be used to update nautical charts of the nation's busiest sea lanes, which can then be used by commercial ships to ensure the safe transportation of goods, especially those that could be hazardous to the environment should the boat be punctured in an accident.

The Thomas Jefferson is a 208-foot hydrographic survey ship, based out of Norfolk, Va. and is one of a fleet of ships used by NOAA to research and survey the marine environment. The ship primarily operates along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, including Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. The ship is accompanied by two 29 foot survey launches, which are also equipped with different kinds of sonar technology.

"It was just on the other side of Sandy Beach."
— Harbormaster John Muncey

Haines said the current project the Thomas Jefferson is working on "encompasses most of Mass Bay from Cape Ann to Boston to Cape Cod." The ship is acquiring 100 percent bottom coverage with multi-beam sonar, and will collect data which can then be processed and applied to the charts.

Haines said the ship has been docked in Boston at the U.S. Coast Guard base and he expected to set sail again Wednesday.

NOAA ship Thomas Jefferson anchored off the Cohasset coast last week.

Kicking it up a notch

Strong veteran cast helps new CHS soccer coach settle in

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Can you say repeat.

Chris Clark can't...or won't.

Virtually everyone who follows boys soccer in the South Shore League is tabbing Norwell, with nine senior starters, to repeat as league camps. The Cohasset captain, however, has other ideas.

"We beat them last year, and I think we can do it again this year," stated Clark, referring to the 2002 season split with the Clippers. "I think Norwell lost more players than us, and we were able to play with them last year."

Like Norwell, Cohasset is a team long in experience. The Skippers feature eight seniors who've been playing together since the youth ranks, in the fall as well as in the spring and summer. This past summer, these eight seniors – captains Clark, Dave Santiago and Coner Buick, along with J.T. Oronte, Jesse Brewer, Craig Laugelle, Andrew Wise and John Andrade – played in several 7-on-7 tourneys, as well as in a regular league play in Plymouth, and fared quite well, winning one tourney and finishing second in the Plymouth league.

"We've worked hard and I think we've got some pretty high expectations," continued Clark.

Last week, the Skippers took part in the annual Hingham jamboree, and went 1-1-1 — topping Milton 2-0 and playing larger Arlington High to a scoreless tie before falling to host Hingham, 1-0, perennial state Div. 2 powers.

"Overall, I think we played pretty well," assessed Clark, who finished second in the team scoring race to Santiago last fall. "We're still not putting the ball away like I think we can, but that should come. We're getting the ball in position; we're just not finishing."

Continuity on the field should

Staying on course

Golf team prospects appear to be on upswing

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

With three of the top four players back this season, and a whole lot more who saw time in the lineup, Torin Sweeney is figuring his Cohasset High golf team could start making a move on some of the monsters of the South Shore League.

It's the year after that, though, that has the third year coach really excited.

"I've got a great group of sophomores who are really serious about golf and who work hard to get better," said Sweeney at the end of last season. "I'm not saying we'll be passing the Mashpees and Harwiches in the next two years, but I think we could be real competitive with them."

10 of the 16 players on last year's team that finished 2-9 (2-8 in SSL play) were sophomores. This group was led by Tim Pilczak, a second year player who flip-flopped much of the season at the number one spot with Mike Hajjar, now a senior and team captain. Both players were extremely consistent this season, with average scores in the low 40s for nine holes.

"Getting Mike and Timmy back is huge," continued Sweeney. "They're both strong, consistent players. Knowing I'll be able to pencil them in at the top of our lineup card again next year is a nice feeling."

Sweeney provided a sneak preview of the future of Skippers golf in the final match last season when he left his seniors at home for a showdown with SSL rival Carver on the Crusaders' Southers Marsh Golf Course, and won going away, 39.5-14.5.

"Getting that one-sided a win on another team's home course showed what these kids can do," noted Sweeney.

Rox end regular season in style

Brockton tunes up for playoffs with 14-6 win over Berkshire

Pittsfield, MA- The Brockton Rox saved one of their best offensive efforts of the season for the very end of the season Monday afternoon, beating the Berkshire Black Bears 14-6 in the final regular season game for both teams. The Rox collected a team-record 20 hits in the team's final playoff tune-up.

Brockton put the game away before Berkshire could record an out in the first inning, as the first 11 Rox batters reached safely and the first ten came around to score. Starter Courtney Hall (2-12) failed to retire any of the nine hitters he faced in the inning, allowing nine runs on seven hits and two walks.

Abner Arroyo started the inning with an infield single, then advanced to third as Jake Daubert doubled to extend his team-record hitting streak to 18 consecutive games. After Saul Bustos walked to load the bases, Darren Blakely drove in the game's first two runs with an RBI double. Craig Lewis followed with a two-run single to make it 4-0, then advanced to third on a two-base error by the centerfielder Shane Hopper.

The Rox continued to tee-off against Hall, as Francisco Matos, Mike Torres and Bobby

Taking the next step

CHS girls soccer team looks to build on 2002 breakthrough season

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

When Deb Beal took over the Cohasset High School girls soccer program five years ago, there weren't enough kids to field both a varsity and junior varsity team.

The team has come a long way since then, making the state tournament last year for the first time since 1995 and finishing with a 10-7-1 record. The next step is to become even more competitive with South Shore League powers Abington and Norwell, and advance in the tournament.

Despite the loss of 11 seniors from 2002's squad, Beal has a team with the talent to make such a run.

Senior co-captains Jenn Buckley and Holly Graham are both coming off league all-star seasons. Buckley, a midfielder, led the team with 12 goals last season, while Graham kept opposing strikers at bay from her sweeper position. Defender Brenna O'Donnell, whom Beal thinks had an all-star caliber season last year, is the other co-captain.

Beal says her captains are relatively quiet and lead by example, adding that they work well with the younger players.

Buckley, who also plays basketball and track, is poised to have another big season.

"She's just so steady; nothing seems to shake her," Beal said. "And she can run forever."

Beal is also looking to senior forward Gillian Weber, junior forward Lauren Rizzotti, and the McMorris twins, striker Sarah and midfielder Leah, to contribute heavily. The twins, both seniors, are among the fastest players on the team.

Weber scored eight goals in 2002, and will once again team with Buckley as Cohasset's 1-2 scoring punch. Beal said Weber is the only player she has had on varsity for all four years, and has seen a tremendous amount of progress from her during that time.

"When she was a freshman, she would just get bounced off every ball," the coach said. "She has just worked so hard on her personal fitness. She's a good athlete and she's in good physical shape right now. I think this is going to be her year."

Cohasset has two options in net with senior Brittany Novak and junior CeCelia Chapman. Novak, whom Beal said is battling a knee injury, started last year's playoff game against Ashland.

One of the biggest improvements in the team this year should be the transition game. In the past, Beal said her defenders would get the ball and lob it up the field, many times resulting in another attack by the other team.

Now, Beal says, her squad has the ability to work the ball up the field themselves, which she attributes to her midfielders, led help ease the transition on the sidelines, as former Rockland High coach Rob Leary takes over for three year head coach Dave Nigro, who resigned last fall after leading the Skippers to three consecutive postseason berths.

Kicking it up a notch

"I'm still getting to know the kids, so we might be a little behind some teams, but we've come a long way in a week, and that's thanks in large part to the seniors," said Leary, a teacher in the Rockland school system who stepped down from head coaching a few years back in order to pursue his Master's Degree. "It also helps a lot having Rick (Dockendorff) staying on (as assistant coach).

"I like what I've seen so far. The kids have been great. They've worked hard and done what I've asked."

That said, the veteran/new coach conceded there were some gaps to fill in around his veterans.

"We're strong up the middle of the field, but we're still looking for a few players to step up on the outside at midfield and fullback," continued Leary, who is also head boys tennis coach at Scituate High and an assistant basketball coach at Rockland High. "We've had a few guys show some things in flashes, but we're looking for more consistency at this point."

Up the middle, the Skippers feature returning SSL all-stars Laugelle at sweeper, Buick at stopper and Clark at center midfield, as well as Santiago at center striker and Brewer in goal.

Clark, a returning South Shore League all-star and All-Eastern Mass selectee after a 27 point season (13 goals, 14 assists), will again quarterback the offense from his center-midfield spot in the 4-3-3 alignment. Santiago, who scored 16 goals last season, will start at the center striker spot, and will likely be flanked by Andrade and fast-emerging sophomore Aiden Buick.

"I think we look pretty solid right there," noted Leary. "Buick has got good size and I like the way (Andrade) is playing, and Clark and Santiago look real strong."

Three players who've risen to the head of the pack in the battle for playing time at the outside mid spots are Wise, B.C. transfer Kevin Dinsmore, a junior, and sophomore Matt O'Connell, the brother of former C.H.S. star Greg O'Connell.

Senior Jesse Brewer (right) has agreed to return to the goalie position this fall.

Oronte, a starting midfielder last year, is expected to fill a big need at fullback once he recovers from a quadriceps strain.

"We haven't been pushing things with J.T. because the big thing is to get him healthy in time for Friday," said Leary, referring to Friday's season opener under the lights at Scituate High (7 p.m. start). "I think he'll really help to stabilize us back there once he's ready to go."

Underclassmen Trevor Brady and Jay Kovak appear to be the lead candidates for the other fullback job at the moment.

"Overall, I think we're going to be strong on defense," asserted Clark. "Trevor and Jay should be OK with a little more experience. With Craig, Coner and J.T. back there, and Jesse back in net, we're not going to be an easy team to score on."

Brewer was the team's starting keeper as a sophomore, but then moved to the midfield last fall and was replaced in net by senior Curt Kahn, who wound up being named team Most Valuable Player by Nigro. Brewer's return between the pipes allows the team to bring talented sophomore keeper Presott Busk, a sophomore, along more slowly.

Returning Eastern Mass all-star Chris Clark will once again quarterback the attack this season.

"Jesse has the experience back there and does such a good job of distributing the ball and making good decisions," noted Leary. "Prescott is going to be a good goalie for us, but this takes some pressure off him. Now we can keep him playing in JV games, and maybe give him an occasional (varsity) start against weaker opponents to start getting his feet wet."

After Friday night's non-league opener versus Scituate, Mashpee comes to town for the Skippers home and South Shore League opener Wednesday afternoon (4 p.m., Alumni Field).

Rox end regular season in style

Brown each followed with singles. Matos' hit scored Lewis with the fifth run, then he came around to score as Hall uncorked a wild pitch while Mike Landry batted with the bases loaded. After Hall then walked Landry, Berkshire manager Darren Bush pulled Hall from the game.

The new pitcher, Scott Meyer, didn't fare much better, as Arroyo greeted him with a two-run double to score Torres and Brown. Daubert concluded the scoring with a two-run single chasing home Landry and Arroyo to make the score 10-0. Brockton's streak of eleven straight batters reaching base then ended as Bustos struck out.

Joey Baker (10-4), the beneficiary of the run support, pitched five solid innings for the Rox to earn his team-record 10th win of the season. Baker allowed only three hits and one run, as Brockton improved to 16-4 in games he started this season. Jose Guerrero, Fontella Jones, Tony Stutz and Conor Brooks each pitched one inning in relief for the Rox, with Brooks concluding the game with a scoreless ninth.

Staying on course

"I saw a lot of improvement from this group on the whole (last) year, and it will be interesting to see how they push each other going in to next year."

Pilczak and Hajjar appear cemented in to the top two spots, while ultra-steady junior Colin Magruder appears the early favorite to slide up from the number four spot to fill the big shoes of graduate Greg O'Brien at number three.

O'Brien actually had the best record and average score (41.5) for the Skippers last season, and was deservedly named a league all-star.

"Greg is going to be missed, no doubt about it," said Sweeney. "He really committed himself (to golf), and shaved six to eight shots off his average from last year. Hard work is the only way to accomplish that.

And he'll be missed for what he did off the course too.

"Greg was a great leader, and a natural captain," continued Sweeney. "Mike Hajjar has some big shoes to fill as a captain too."

The other players lost to the caps and gowns were Pat Reardon, a three year starter who averaged a 46 this season, frequent starters Ross Lieb-Lappen and Roh Lehr, and Trey Curry.

"All of those guys helped us, and they'll all be missed," said Sweeney, "but I think we've got the depth coming up behind them to fill those voids."

Juniors Jack Carroll and Chris Simms saw regular action last season in the top eight spots, while classmates Ricky Lordan, Brendan Ford, Dan Allen, John DeWaal, Andrew Lavallo and Elizabeth Stone also flashed encouraging signs in what opportunities they saw.

This year's incoming freshman class is also rumored to have a ringer or two.

In addition, Sweeney likes the character of these kids on the whole, and was proud this attribute was also recognized by his fellow coaches who last year voted to award the Skippers the South Shore League's Sportsmanship Award.

The Skippers kick off their season

by Buckley, McMorris and junior Nicole Whitney.

"That's the one thing I always harp on is our transition game," Beal said.

All told, the coach is excited for the possibilities of what her up-front players can accomplish this year.

"It's just a force; I love it," Beal said. "It was really, really fun to watch them scrimmage [on Friday]."

If there is one area Beal is concerned about, it's in the back. The team lost Julie Lordan, Katherine Coyne and Lindsay Grossman to graduation. New players, like junior Christine Lovallo, will be lining up with returning veterans Graham and O'Donnell.

Beal says, however, her concern is due to a lack of experience, not talent.

"I think that they need a few more game-like situations, and I think that they'll jump right into it," Beal said. "Speaking with JV coach, she said, 'Oh, they're going to do fine back there. They're going to be just as good as the others were.' And I believe her, because they had a great record last year too."

That JV record was 12-2, and the coach is Kara Connerty.

"She does an outstanding job with them," Beal said of Connerty. "Just working on the individual stuff, she's teaching them the style of play that we like to play [at the varsity level]. We'd be lost without her."

Unlike years past, a lack of depth certainly won't be an issue for the Lady Skippers this year. Beal has 23 girls on the varsity roster.

"[The roster] is a little big, but I don't have the heart to cut anyone," the coach said.

Beal added, though, that a rotation of about 17 players will consistently get playing time. The JV squad has 22 players, including a group of freshman that Beal said she is excited about.

The coach said she is "cautiously optimistic" for the upcoming season. Although she said she is hesitant to do so, Beal said her Lady Skippers are in the top three in the league with perennial powers Abington and Norwell.

Now it's just a matter of actually beating those teams.

"I'd love to knock Norwell off, and I'd love to knock Abington off," said Beal, who pointed to last year's close games with the Lady Clippers and Div. 2 Scituate as reasons for optimism.

"I think that we can definitely be a tournament team again," Beal said. "Looking at our schedule, and looking at how we've competed with teams on that schedule before, I think we can easily win nine games."

Meet Rosie
She has a twinkle in her eye, a smile on her lips and autism.

Rosie's family understands that for Rosie, and the more than one million Americans like her who are living with an autism spectrum disorder, research offers hope. That's why they joined forces with 7,000 other people in Boston last year, to raise money for the National Alliance for Autism Research (NAAR), the first organization in the country dedicated to funding and accelerating biomedical research to unlock the mysteries of autism spectrum disorders. To date, NAAR has committed $14.9 million to directly fund autism research - more than any other non-governmental organization in the U.S. Most of the money raised for NAAR comes from the Walk F.A.R. (Family & Friends for Autism Research) for NAAR Walkathons.
Please join Rosie and her team, "Rosie's Shutterbugs," as they walk for a cure for autism.

Amanda to sign 'Millennium Girl'

Buttonwood Books & Toys welcomes Amanda C. Thompson, Sunday Sept. 21 from 2-4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset for the release of her debut novel, "Millennium Girl." Amanda of Cohasset has just turned 14, however the bigger celebration in her life is the release of her first novel, "Millennium Girl". "Millennium Girl" tells the story of Carolyn, an ordinary preteen girl who is abruptly uprooted from her life in Alaska to move to California. In this utterly unfamiliar world, Carolyn struggles through her first days at school, her first encounters with bullies, her first attempts at making friends, and her first new crush, Matt. When Matt's mother is hospitalized, Carolyn strives to help her withdrawn friend. Through this heart-rending tale, Carolyn grows and learns what it is to be a true friend.

Amanda is a freshman at Cohasset High School. She wrote this book primarily because she loves to write and had set for herself the goal of writing a novel by the time she was 13. However, she freely credits her friend Molly Gallagher for keeping her on task. Weekly she would ask Amanda what she had written and ask to see her work. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

ENVIRONMENTALLY FRIENDLY GARDENS

This is the second in the series about the organic gardens of Cohasset. Featured this week is the lawn and garden of Ed and Priscilla Long at 31 Nichols Road.

"As our children grew up, they began living a very healthy-organic life style and we followed suit," says Priscilla Long. "We have been practicing organic lawn care for five years and have noticed a reduction in the algae our Little Harbor property. We use compost, manure and lime to fertilize the gardens and lawn".

If you have an organic garden and would be willing to be featured in the Mariner, please call Mary Michel of the Open Space Committee at 781-383-0450.

Cabaret group brings 'At the Movies' to Raffael's

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

The tight four part harmony cabaret artists Will McMillan, Brian Patton, Michael Ricca and Nina Van

Such bring to their performances in the musical revue "At The Movies" — currently at Raffael's in North Quincy — is not an act.

"We have each been through a lot together in our personal and professional lives over the years, and getting together to rehearse and perform this show has bonded us as a group. We have grown to really love each other," McMillan explained by telephone last week.

The harmonious four-part friendship began in 1999 when McMillan, Ricca and Van Such met at that O'Neill Theater Center's Cabaret Symposium. That same year, the trio teamed with pianist, singer and musical arranger Brian Patton to create their first revue of music from feature films.

"The three of us really became friends at that symposium and we came away from it all pumped up to do more and make more music together," recalls McMillan. "Nina knew Brian as a wonderful pianist and arranger, so the four of us just hooked up. We decided to focus on film music, because of Michael whom we call our 'movie savant.' Both Nina and Michael have a genuine love for and encyclopedic knowledge of movies."

Nina Vansuch, Brian Patton, Mickael Ricca and Will McMillan make up the vocal group "At the Movies" coming to Raffael's in Quincy.

From their first show's focus on films of the 1950s and 60s, the foursome then presented a show featuring movie from animated features including many Disney classics. Film music has proven to be fertile musical ground for the quartet. This spring, they earned an IRNE award for Best Cabaret Performance by a Group from the Independent Reviewers of New England. "The current show we're doing includes our favorite songs from the first two shows, plus some material featured on our debut CD, 'Reel One.' Some of the songs are beloved and very familiar like 'Dear Heart,' ('Dear Heart,' 1964), 'When You Wish Upon A Star,' ('Pinocchio,' 1940), 'It Might Be You,' ('Tootsie,' 1982), and 'Secret Love,' ('Calamity Jane,' 1953) and the theme from 'Valley of the Dolls,' (1967) which is a great Andre Previn song from a not so great movie. We also do some lesser-known songs that are really beautiful like 'That'll Do' from 'Babe: Pig In The City' (1998)." They each share insights into their subject matter, too.

"We tell some stories about the movies themselves and our experiences with them. Most people have their own wonderful wealth of association with this music and this really connects our audiences to the show."

It was just this kind of audience connection that McMillan was seeking when he switched professional gears from more hard-edged music to cabaret about a decade ago.

"In the late 1980s, I was in several rock bands. Eventually, I grew tired of having to wear ear plugs to protect my hearing. There was also way too much heavy equipment to carry around from gig to gig. When I left the rock world, I tried the folk music scene for about 18 months. Then, I

Celebrating a decade of laughs

Comedy Night anniversary show supports Sept. 11 victims' families

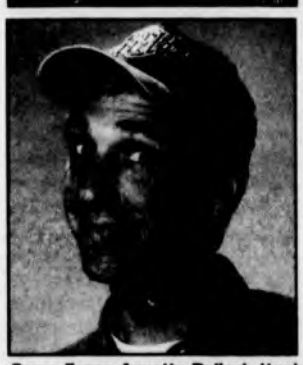
By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Two very different anniversaries — one celebratory, the other tragic. Both will be observed accordingly on Thursday, Sept. 11 at Jimbo's Restaurant in Braintree. And one more thing, there's also sure to be lots of outrageous antics and laughs.

On the more festive note, it's the Ten Year Anniversary Show for Comedy Night Jimbo's South, the live standup comedy showcase that has run steadily at the Braintree Five Corners venue since for every third Thursday since September 1993. The series was founded by Braintree comedienne Annette Pollack, who has also performed a set or two at each one of the shows from the beginning, sharing the bills with an all-star lineup of locally and sometimes nationally known comedians.

On the far more serious note, the decade milestone celebration also falls on the two-year anniversary of the events that seem to have changed our world political climate permanently the terrorist attacks on America September 11, 2001. To commemorate the tragedy, Pollack has decided to donate a portion of the proceeds from this show to The September 11th Children's Fund. Appropriate to the occasion, the anniversary show/benefit will run for two hours instead of the usual hour-and-a-half that Comedy Night does at Jimbo's, and feature eight comedians including Pollack and star headliner Bob Seibel, plus a special guest emcee. Admission for the show will also be $15 rather than the usual $10.

The September 11th Children's Fund, located at the National Philanthropic Trust in Jenkintown, Pennsylvania, was established to promote the long-term emotional, mental and physical health and well being of children and families affected by the 9/11 tragedy. The fund will support services to the surviving children of flight crew and passengers on the hijacked airplanes that crashed, plus those of clerical workers, secretaries, security and maintenance workers, police, firefighters and others who lost their lives at both at both the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.



Comedienne Annette Pollock (top) headlines the Ten Year Anniversary Show for Comedy Night at Jimbo's South which will also serve as a fundraiser for families of the victims of Sept. 11. Eight comedians will perform in the Sept. 11 show, including Bob Seibel (middle) and Bob Niles (bottom).

"When we started the comedy shows at Jimbo's, they were pretty small as things of this sort tend to be when they're starting out," said Pollack. "But over the years, the shows and the crowds have grown exponentially. Nowadays, we always get at least 75 to 125 people on any given Thursday, and a lot of them make reservations and have dinner first."

"I chose this September 11th Children's Fund because I like what they're giving the donations to. I think in the two years since 9/11, people have tended to overlook the mental and emotional trauma that has effected so many children and families of the victims of the tragedy, as opposed to the due attention given to the lives lost. But the issue of how these other people continue to be effected is an ongoing one. So I thought this Fund was appropriate for a benefit," Pollack added.

Pollack is also a CPA and a longtime standup comedy fan who first ventured into the profession herself after signing up for a comedy workshop at the Cambridge Center for Adult Education in 1991. In the ten years since the comedienne organized the first Jimbo's date, she has expanded her comedy-show enterprise to now include a half-dozen other regular venues around the South Shore.

Headliner Bob Seibel is a well-travelled funnyman whose particular skewed view of life falls somewhere between George Carlin and Bobcat Goldthwaite. He's a veteran of such renown clubs as New York's Laugh Factory and L.A.'s Comedy Store as well as opening for performers like Frankie Valli and the Pointer Sisters.

Also on the bill this Thursday are local comics Vernon Harrison, Bob Niles, Jack Hurney, Joe Kringdon, Glen Gordon and Bill Ford with guest emcee Harrison Stebbins.

"We've almost become an institution on the South Shore," said Pollack.

The Ten Year Anniversary for Comedy Night Jimbo's South takes placeThursday, Sept. 11. For reservations call Jimbo's in Braintree at (781) 848-0300.

Making the most of magic moments

Marshfield artist shows work at Ventress Library

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

For some artists, it all comes down to the right subject at the right moment, getting a feeling for the place and time and the excitement of being there.

Such is the case for Marshfield painter Jody Regan, who attempts to convey this muse in her aptly titled exhibition, "This Magic Moment," a collection of original oil works, on view at Marshfield's Ventress Library through Sept. 13. It's also the first solo show for Regan, a member of Marshfield's North River Arts Society.

Regan's show offers an impressive output of works produced by the artist over the past three years, which she said has been the time since she began her most serious efforts at painting. Raised in Canton, Regan took additional arts courses as a mathematics major at Boston College, then worked for 23 years as a software engineer, first in Washington D.C. and then after moving back to the Boston area some 15 years ago.

The artist's works by her own design cover a wide and diverse variety of subjects in formats including landscapes, still lifes and figure studies.

If the title of Regan's show has a familiar ring, the artist admits that when choosing the name she thought about the like-titled song standard that is now a staple of oldies-radio. But she also offers this anecdote of the actual concept behind the title.

"A few years ago, when I was at the opening of a North River

An old-fashioned tapioca pudding

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The problem with most old-fashioned recipes for tapioca pudding is pearl tapioca. Made from the tapioca plant, which is grown throughout much of the world, pearl tapioca is nothing more than tapioca starch that has been heated into pearls. These large orbs, however, are difficult to cook with since they require extensive soaking (an hour and a half) and cooking (30 minutes). In addition, the resulting tapioca tends to be coarse, the large "fish-eye" pieces familiar to any adult over the age of 40. I made three different recipes from a variety of older cookbooks and none was satisfactory and all were rather complicated.

Still searching for a simple, more refined dessert, I looked on the back of the Minute Tapioca box and found a recipe that was much quicker to make and the smaller bits of tapioca made a more refined dessert. (Minute Tapioca is also made from tapioca starch but it is partially gelatinized and then pressed into tiny pellets. It requires no soaking, which speeds up cooking.) However, as is the case with many packaged food products, the manufacturers call for too much of their own product to stimulate consumption. As a result, the pudding was overly gelatinous. I reduced the tapioca from three tablespoons to two and the resulting pudding still set but was more tender. The basic recipe calls for milk only — no cream — and I thought it was a bit thin in both flavor and mouth feel. Therefore, I substituted one cup of cream for one of milk. I also slightly upped the amount of sugar and worked up a few simple variations. If, however, you like a less creamy dessert, go ahead and use all milk.

I also discovered that many of the old-fashioned recipes were really a tapioca cream, the pudding folded into whipped heavy cream. I tried this variation and found that the resulting dessert was not an improvement over the basic pudding.

CLASSIC TAPIOCA PUDDING

A blend of milk and heavy cream gives this dessert a silky texture.

1 egg
1/3 cup plus 1 tablespoon sugar
2 tablespoons Minute Tapioca (do not use the pearl variety tapioca)
1 3/4 cups milk
1 cup heavy cream
1 teaspoon vanilla

Whisk the egg in a 2-quart saucepan until well beaten. Whisk in the remaining ingredients except the vanilla and let stand 5 minutes. Over medium heat and stirring constantly, cook the mixture until it reaches a full boil. The mix ture will still be thin. Remove from heat and stir in vanilla. Cool 20 minutes, stir, and then spoon into individual serving dishes or glasses. Chill before serving.

Serves 4 to 6

TAPIOCA PUDDING WITH ORANGE PEEL AND ALMONDS

There is an established tradition of adding fruits or other flavorings to tapioca pudding, the most common ingredients being almonds, raisins, citron, currant jelly, and sherry. This is a simpler approach, pairing only orange and almond. To make it, simply add 1 teaspoon minced or grated orange peel and 2 tablespoons finely chopped almonds to the master recipe when adding the vanilla.

TAPIOCA PUDDING WITH ROSE WATER, PISTACHIOS, AND CARDAMOM

Add 1/2 teaspoon rose water, 1/4 teaspoon ground cardamom, and 2 tablespoons finely chopped pistachios to the master recipe when adding the vanilla.

found myself attracted to the intimacy of cabaret. At its best, cabaret has the capacity to enthrall its audience."

And its performers as well.

"We love paying homage to these songs. Brian has provided us with some gorgeous harmony arrangements, too. We have so much fun with this music that we spend almost all of our rehearsals just singing in harmony together. There is quite literally a good feeling that comes over each of us when we work together."

Society show, which was a group show that I submitted paintings to, there was a husband of one of the artists who was of the opinion that every painting or work of art should make a statement," said Regan. "And he asked me what is your painting trying to say. That's when it occurred to me what it is I try to put across in my work. That's basically the Magic Moment, the idea of capturing the immediacy of what's in front of you, and for me personally, the feeling that I'm thrilled to be right where I am."

Regan added that when painting she'll notice details and objects that catch her interest. For instance, the figure study "Watching Monhegan" pictures two visitors relaxing on the beach outside the famous Maine island retreat seated in what the artist describes as "web-lawn chairs from 1965." Some of the paintings inter-relate, such as the rural-Maine bridge scene "Damariscotta from Newcastle," which the artist noted is also the road leading to the beach in "Watching Monhegan."

A number of other landscapes, such as "Peddock's View" and "Summer Skyline," are painted in Hull, which Regan describes as a stimulating place for an artist. Many other scenes are also based locally, such as snowscapes focusing on the play of shadows and light set in Marshfield, an elegant "Square Cafe" view in Hingham, and a foliage-rich scene of two figures engaged in a "Harvest Waltz," screening a brook for cranberries in Scituate.

"I like to experiment with color," said Regan. "And I like think ahead of time in regard to what colors are going to work best with any given subject, particularly with still lifes. My main interest is in exploring color harmonies, which I think when done right keeps paintings fresh."

Jody Regan's show "This Magic Moment" will be on display at Marshfield's Ventress Library through Sept. 13. For more information call the North River Arts Society at (781) 837-8091.

Late summer color for the shady border

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

Crisp, refreshing weather ushered in last weekend offering a hint of the glorious days to come as the unofficial end to the summer season grows nigh. Following a week of oppressive heat and humidity, the brisk temperatures and cool breezes proved remarkably invigorating as the lethargy of days gone by were instantly shed and gardening chores were tackled with renewed enthusiasm. Nurseries were bustling with activity as gardeners browsed for bargains among sale-priced shrubbery and perennials while selecting a few early blooming mums, asters, ornamental peppers and sedums to rejuvenate dull colorless borders and weary container gardens.

A stroll through the shady garden in late summer can be an uninspiring journey, as many borders become a monotone of lackluster green. Handsome hostas begin to fade, their decorative leaves may start to shrivel, blue-leafed cultivars become deep green in color, and spent flower stalks, often covered with seed pods, rise above the tattered foliage. Many of my prized hostas are victims of a season-long "slugfest" as a result of our prolonged damp weather and resemble green, gold and variegated Swiss cheese.

Despite the decline in some of our shade-loving superstars, the shady garden still boasts several colorful, late-blooming performers. Dazzling displays of multicolored coleus provide bursts of color mingled among the hostas, ferns and astilbes. Luxuriant leaves in shades of velvety purple, speckled yellows and golds, sensational raspberry reds and oranges, and a wealth of texturally diverse foliage brighten even the darkest corners. Equally lush specimens are flourishing in containers along my walkways in both full sun and deep shade. In the days to come, cuttings will be taken of nearly every variety to root in perlite and carry through the colder months indoors to enjoy next season.

Equally flamboyant are the bold, showy spikes of our native cardinal flower (Lobelia cardinalis). Brilliant red spires glow against the backdrop of the cool green, gold and variegated clumps of hosta and the feathery leaves of cinnamon fern. Hummingbirds find these clusters of tubular red flowers irresistible and visit them regularly as they make their rounds through the gardens during the fall season prior to their departure to warmer climes in October. Several spectacular hybrids are available in numerous shades of red salmon, and pink. Lobelia 'Ruby Slippers' has been especially long-lived in my garden while others have often disappeared after a season or two.

In addition to the dramatic red forms, there are a variety of blue and purple lobelias that begin blooming slightly later than their scarlet relatives and seem to be particularly vigorous in my heavy clay soils. The great blue lobelia (Lobelia siphilitica) produces quantities of lavender-blue spikes that emerge from a basal rosette of attractive, shiny green leaves. Occasionally, white seedlings appear and I have often segregated these to create a stunning clump of snowy white spires that are particularly effective in the evening garden. If allowed to seed freely about the garden, blue lobelia will form large colonies and may even become a bit of nuisance depending on your perspective. A stunning deep violet purple variety, L. Vedrariensis, is particularly elegant. These cool-toned lobelias offer a handsome backdrop to the delicate blue-green foliage and persistent sulfur-yellow blooms of Corydalis lutea that has offered nonstop blooms since May.

Members of the lobelia family prefer moisture-retentive soils and are ideal candidates for growing next to ponds and streams which is where they tend to be found in the wild. They will tolerate sunny locales in moist soils but seem to perform their best in partial shade where moisture tends to be more consistent. Despite this preference for moisture, I have found heavy soils that are prone to winter wetness often lead to the basal rosettes heaving out of the ground during the winter months resulting in their demise. Moisture-retentive, well-drained soils in partial shade have proven to be the most reliable locale for their annual return in my own garden.

Several varieties of hosta offer late summer blooms that are both attractive and remarkably fragrant. Although many gardeners eliminate hosta bloom stalks as soon as they begin to develop, I find the flowers of many cultivars appealing and allow all types to bloom as they are favored by the hummingbirds throughout the season. I am particularly fond of those that produce white blossoms and none are more spectacular than those of H. plantaginea. Commonly known as the August lily, the nocturnal blooms of this glossy-leafed species may be up to 6 inches long and are deliciously fragrant. This species is often difficult to find and slow to increase but one of its offspring, Hosta 'Royal Standard' is readily available and one of the most vigorous hostas in the trade. Tolerant of full sun or full shade, numerous flower stalks produce bountiful, sweet-scented white blooms during late August and September. Other outstanding hosta cultivars that offer aromatic blooms and attractive foliage throughout the season include 'Fragrant Bouquet', 'Guacamole', 'Fragrant Blue', and 'Invincible'.

Astilbes are certainly one of the most texturally desirable additions to the shady border and a charming dwarf, Astilbe chinensis pumila, serves as an excellent ground cover for the front of the shady border. More drought-tolerant than many of its relatives, the ferny foliage forms a dense spreading mat and bears 1-foot rosy pink plumes in late summer. During the winter months, the fluffy, dried plumes add beauty to the dormant garden.

LISTEN To Life

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

MORE THAN A BAD HAIR DAY

More than 80% of hearing impairments cannot be treated medically or surgically because they are caused by "sensorineural" hearing loss. That means that some of the 30,000 to 50,000 hair cells in the inner ear, which are responsible for transmitting sound information to the auditory nerve, have been injured or destroyed. The hair cells that respond to higher pitches are the most vulnerable. Those affected by noise-induced hearing loss or presbycusis, both of which are forms of sensorineural losses, may find women and children particularly difficult to understand. Another sign is poor discrimination of consonants, which tend to be higher in pitch and lower in intensity than vowels. Fortunately, hearing instruments can help those with sensorineural hearing loss.

Although hearing loss often results from the effects of aging, it can also be caused (or made worse) by prolonged exposure to noise pollution, heredity, illness, medications, or injury. Are you hearing less than you used to? Come see us at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER and find out why and what you can do about it. We're ready to help with free comprehensive evaluations, precision fittings, and a wide range of hearing instruments. Follow-up care and repairs are also part of the services we provide at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. PH:781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. The term "presbycusis" refers to age-related hearing loss.

Boag shines in "The Producers"

As Lead Tenor in the national tour of the smash hit musical "The Producers," Marshfield native John Boag has been playing to wildly enthusiastic audiences at Boston's Colonial Theatre since June. Boarding with his parents, John and Kay Boag, the performer has spent his days on the beach at Green Harbor and his nights on stage. With summer winding down, and theatergoers in other cities clamoring for the chance to see the musical that won more Tony Awards than any other before or since, local audiences have only a short time left to catch Boag front and center in the show's act two showstopper, "Springtime For Hitler."

Run don't walk to the box office, however, because before long Boag will be packing up his beach towel and Boston will be bidding farewell to one of the biggest hits in Broadway history. "The Producers - The New Mel Brooks Musical" will be at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston Street, Boston, through Sept. 13. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.broadwayinboston.com.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 3

The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:34 a.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate next Wednesday, September 10. Get an early start to this day. You can get a lot accomplished in the morning and early afternoon. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. The moon continues to travel in optimistic Sagittarius, and the sun forms a harmonious 60-degree alignment to Saturn at 2:48 p.m. There is one rough spot in effect between 5:55-8:55 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. Keep it light and avoid touchy subjects in this period.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 4

This is a great day for vacationing. If you are working, you must carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. People may be talkative and easily distracted from practical matters. The Sagittarius moon aligns with retrograde Mercury at 7:23 a.m. and becomes inactive. You can make up for lost time after 5:51 p.m., when the moon enters business-oriented Capricorn and forms easy contacts to Uranus, Jupiter and Mars.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5

Challenging alignments of Venus to Pluto and the Capricorn moon to Saturn can make for a rough start to this day. Stop worrying about situations you have no control over. Instead, keep your hands and mind busy with practical matters. Zero in on responsibilities you have take on, promises you have made and follow through. Keep your nose to the grindstone; you can be most productive.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 6

The Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury at 8:43 a.m. and becomes inactive until 10:15 p.m. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished. Tackle jobs you have been putting off; you can get them out of the way today. Finish projects already begun, make repairs, review and redo. The moon enters social Aquarius at 10:15 p.m.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

The combination of an Aquarius moon and Mars-Jupiter opposition prompts you to be more adventurous today. Break out of your usual routine; try something new and different. Put recent pressures on the back burner; let more fun and joy into your life.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

At 5:01 a.m. the Aquarius moon aligns with Pluto and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. After that no major planetary activity occurs. However, a full moon is building and will culminate Wednesday, generating high energy. You can be most productive if you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. This is an excellent period for tackling jobs that need to be redone or repaired.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

The moon enters Pisces at 4:07 a.m., and the final windup to the full moon begins. This moon aligns with Uranus, Mars and Jupiter, warning you to take it slow and easy this morning. Stress management is important. The planets Mercury and Pluto are in high focus at this time, because they interact with this full moon. Energy and emotions run high. Instead of trying to change others or control situations, this is a time to let go and find a new course of action for yourself.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 10

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The sun aligns with Pluto at 5:34 a.m. and with Mercury at 9:57 p.m. The full moon culminates at 12:36 p.m., 17 1/2 degrees Pisces-Virgo. This combination of planetary energies may shed new light on situations that have been troubling you. Be sure to take time out for yourself; to relax and maintain a peaceful, positive attitude. Avoid stimulants; eat light foods. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 11

At 1:41 a.m. the Pisces moon becomes inactive, making for a slow start to this morning. Others may be moody, disagreeable. Don't make waves. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Pluto warns against signing contracts or launching business enterprises. On the other hand, you can achieve breakthroughs on an inner, spiritual level. Let go of past hurts and traumas; open your heart to new possibilities. At 12:09 p.m. an Aries moon takes over, prompting you to get back in the swing of favorite sports and exercise programs.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

A lunar alignment to Saturn may generate delays this morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. People may be impatient, aggressive, argumentative. Keep a cool head. Fortunately, this planetary influence passes over by noon, and the afternoon and evening hold high potential for productivity. Projects that need repair, renovation get the green light. At 9:39 p.m. the Aries moon aligns with Pluto and becomes inactive.

Arthur Lehr keeps park looking good

Is familiar sight atop his tractor

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A tall willow tree stands in the middle of the fields of Wheelwright Park. It is a tree that usually needs to live near water to thrive, but has done outstandingly well in the 10 years it has been growing in the field. It is a tree that was planted by Arthur Lehr, and perhaps Mother Nature is trying to thank him for all the years he has spent tending to the land of Cohasset.

On a sunny afternoon when the grass is high, Lehr can be found in a number of places, always atop his tractor. From the fields of Wheelwright Park up the trails to the Girl Scout cabin, there are many parcels of land that would be overgrown if it weren't for him.

"I enjoy driving the tractor," Lehr said, adding that he was more than happy to take over the job when the man who used to tend to the grass decided to give it up. In fact, 84-year-old Lehr said he's been cultivating the land for years.

"I've always had an undying love of tractors," he said.

Lehr lives next door to the North Main Street entrance to Wheelwright Park. Over the years, he has taken great pride in not only keeping the grass clipped, but controlling overgrowth as well. He points out a large area of neat, green grassy open space, which he said used to be overgrown and unruly until he took over. He has a garden where he grows small evergreen trees, mixed among his grape vines, which he replants in the park when they are big enough.

In fact, Lehr spends so much time at the park that, "People think I own the

Avalon hearing will wrap up on Monday

Economics is still on agenda

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Avalon opponents have until Monday to comment on financial projections of the proposed 200-unit apartment complex.

After considerable discussion, the Zoning Board of Appeals agreed with various individuals and town officials that there had not been sufficient time to review the project's financial data and promised to keep the comprehensive permit hearing open another week.

Selectmen, for example, received the financial report that was written by ZBA consultant Michael Jacobs on Monday morning and Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the board did not have time to fully absorb it before making Avalon comments to the ZBA that evening.

"The financial analysis has just been given to us," said Town Counsel Paul DeRensis, speaking for the Water Commission. "We need a chance to react to it — to test it the way it ought to be tested."

Although urging the ZBA close the yearlong hearing, Avalon attorney Steven Schwartz praised the ZBA for having been fair throughout the lengthy process and said Avalon would not object to another week.

What's at stake could be the number of units that Avalon could build and still have the project be financially feasible, although Avalon has not said it would agree to shrink the project.

School board miffed over lunch menu edict

Committee questions role of health board

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While the School Committee is all for healthier lunches for schoolchildren, it isn't pleased with the Board of Health's edicts in that regard.

"I'm all in favor of getting health food in there, but we don't need further complications, which includes other boards trying to usurp power over us," said School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo. "Do they have the jurisdiction to tell us this?"

With concern for obesity in young children, the Board of Health has asked the schools to provide a "junk" free day at least once a week, with no burgers, fries, pizza and pasta. The board asked only snacks low in fat and carbohydrates be put in vending machines, that ice cream be replaced with Popsicles or other frozen snacks which are low in fat and carbohydrates, and that only water and 100 percent juice drinks be available in the vending machines and in the food lines.

Centralizing bus stops could get green light

Some kids on buses an hour

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Board of Health wants to see kids eat healthier and get more exercise – to the point where its directive on school lunches has ruffled the School Committee's feathers.

But when it comes to more exercise – the health board could be getting its wish, albeit in a serendipitous fashion.

Because bus runs for students are sometimes lasting almost an hour each way, talks of consolidating stops to help cut down on travel time are in the works.

School Transportation Coordinator Peggy Litchfield said current routes try to take into consideration long travel time. Usually children with the longest route in the morning have the shortest in the afternoon, she said.

Petition is filed on Avalon site cleanup

The Water Commission and 10 Cohasset residents have filed a petition to require public oversight over the cleanup of the existing hazardous waste contamination on the site of the proposed Avalon housing development.

"There are potentially serious levels of contamination in the soil and groundwater at the site of the proposed Avalon 200 unit housing development, which is a state 21E 'Superfund' site," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "Since this site is in the watershed for Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply, the Water Commission wants to make sure that, whatever happens on this property, that the hazardous waste is properly cleaned up."

An environmental study of the site released Aug. 22 detected 108 parts per billion (ppb) of trichloroethylene, a toxic chemical, in groundwater on the site, very far above the drinking water standard of 5 ppb, he said.

"They have also found 142 ppb of tetrachloroethylene, also very far above the standard of 5 ppb, in the groundwater."

"We also want to make sure that before any construction starts on this site that all the contaminants have been removed and that the site is no longer a threat to future residents of the site or to our drinking water," McNabb said.

When the petition is filed with the current owner of the site, Westwood Properties, they are required to prepare a Public Involvement Plan (PIP) for approval by the state and hold a public hearing. After a 21E site is designated a PIP site, the environmental review of the site and all cleanup activities are a fully public process and the town and the public have a right to review and comment on all stages of the review and cleanup, he said.

Town wants traffic light at train station

Cohasset is asking for help from legislators at the Statehouse to insure the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority installs a traffic light at Route 3A and the entrance to the train station.

The MBTA recently notified the town that its agreement to install the traffic signal was subject to the approval of the Massachusetts Highway Department since 3A is a state highway.

After reviewing preliminary design drawings, MassHighway said a traffic signal is not warranted at this location, said Joseph L. Eng, MBTA director of Greenbush construction.

"The Board of Selectmen and I are very concerned about this decision as Route 3A is an extremely busy roadway and vehicles entering and exiting the station during peak hours will be placed at risk with no traffic signal at this location," stated Town Manager Mark Haddad in letters to state Rep. Garrett Bradley and state Sen. Robert Hedlund.

"The Board of Selectmen and I would urge you to do everything in your power to work with MassHighway to ensure that this traffic signal is installed during the restoration of the Greenbush Line," Haddad stated.

Eng said the MBTA would install conduit under the roadway to facilitate the future installation of traffic signals if needed.

The train station is slated for the former Graham Waste site, which is now the temporary home of the Cohasset Fire Department during renovations at its Elm Street headquarters.

Haddad said he has scheduled a meeting with MBTA officials Wednesday at 11 a.m. to discuss the issue.

United Nations Day

The Board of Selectmen voted to declare Oct. 24 as United Nations Day. This year marks the UN's 58th anniversary. The United Nations Association of Greater Boston organizes a celebration at the Statehouse on Oct. 24 whose theme is "Global Communities: Building a Bridge to Literacy." The UN Day proclamation voted by Selectmen will be displayed at the Statehouse for the celebration.

Village parking tickets can be irksome

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There are few things in life more unpopular than a parking ticket. And Cohasset is no exception.

So far this year, Cohasset police have issued a total of 1,277 parking tickets for violations ranging from parking too near a fire hydrant (19 violations) to illegal parking in a handicapped spot (49).

But it appears "over-time" tickets (80 violations since January) for parking too long in a village space are most likely to irk motorists, who may find a small piece of unfriendly paper notifying them of the infraction tucked under the windshield wiper.

Case in point are the circumstances surrounding a ticket detailed in a recent letter from a Red Lion Inn patron that was copied to Selectmen by the inn's owner, Gerd Ordelheide.

Judith Cellucci, 21 Bates Lane, complained the $25 parking ticket ruined an otherwise lovely evening at the Red Lion Inn. She also noted most of the village businesses were closed with the exception of Tedeschi's and therefore questioned why police would be ticketing at that time.

She also described the police officer as "being on a mission that night" and said the officer's attitude when confronted as "appalling and offensive."

The letter was powerful enough to warrant some discussion at last week's selectmen's meeting. The board directed Town Manager Mark Haddad to look into the matter.

"I tell officers to distance themselves from these situations because people get so emotional about it."

— Police Chief Robert Jackson

Police Chief Robert Jackson said anyone with a complaint about an officer's attitude should contact him.

"I would certainly like to hear about it," he said.

Jackson explained on the night of Aug. 9, when Cellucci's car was ticketed, the department received a complaint from Tedeschi's that customers could not find a parking space because vehicles were parked in front of the convenience store for longer than the 15-minute limit. The ticket in question was written at 8:45 p.m., after the officer had noted the plates of the vehicle 45 minutes earlier in the same spot.

"Eight tickets were given out as a result of that call," Jackson said.

He said once an officer starts writing a ticket, it is considered written, so parking violators should not try to talk the officer out of the infraction. Officers are advised to inform motorists where they can appeal a ticket and to keep conversation to a minimum, Jackson said. (Tickets can be appealed at the Selectmen's office).

"I tell officers to distance themselves from these situations because people get so emotional about it," he said.

In April, a Scituate resident sent a letter to the editor also complaining about receiving a parking ticket in the village after an afternoon of shopping and lunch. She said in the future she would take her guests to Scituate or Duxbury — towns she considers "much more hospitable to visitors."

Jackson described the parking situation downtown as a "difficult balancing act."

"We need to balance access to parking for the businesses with the public's need to access parking spaces, which are limited down there," he said.

Although the village gets its share of tickets, the most parking violations by far occur at Sandy Beach, where beach stickers are required. So far this year, police have issued 471 tickets at Sandy Beach for $11,100 in fines. That's nearly double the number of tickets police issued at Sandy Beach during the same time last year. Police stepped up patrols this year due to complaints about non-residents parking at the beach.

Red Lion Inn to get liquor warning

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Employees at the Red Lion Inn will have to begin monitoring alcohol served to patrons more closely, or owner Gerd Ordelheide may find himself with more than just a slap on the wrist.

Selectmen voted Tuesday night to issue a formal letter or warning, reminding the owner and employees of their duty to comply with licensing conditions and the provisions of state liquor laws.

The issue was brought to the attention of Selectmen when Police Chief Robert Jackson sent a letter and police records of all documented disturbances at the Red Lion Inn since 1996.

Jackson's letter stated, "During the summer, this department has documented disturbances, intoxicated patrons being served alcohol, parking complaints, public drinking, noise complaints, and alcohol related medical emergencies at the Red Lion Inn."

"The Chief is recommending a letter of warning, which I think is appropriate as a first step," said Town Manager Mark Haddad, adding if more disturbances continue on at the rate they have, a hearing would be the logical next step.

"If a hearing has to be called, we'll have a full blown liquor license hearing," he said.

In a narrative written by Sgt. William Quigley on Saturday Aug. 30, 2003 he reported "public drinking, assault and battery, serving intoxicated patrons, and parking are ongoing problems which the management has failed to address after several warnings." That night, he witnessed a parked vehicle blocking access for emergency vehicles, and five males drinking beverages in public, which they bought at the Red Lion Inn bar. The fire department was also called to the scene when they were advised lit "tiki" torches had been placed along the perimeter of the establishment. Upon inspection, Capt. Runey found the torches had caused a small mulch fire near the building, which was extinguished by the engine company. Quigley requested at the end of his narrative "the Red Lion Inn be notified in writing that they are mandated to call the police if there is a problem/disturbance at the licensed premises."

On July 11, 2003, Ptl. Shellee Peters responded to a call of a reported fight in the Town Parking Lot, which had started in the Red Lion Inn bar and ended up in the parking lot. When Peters approached the men in the parking lot, she observed no cuts or bruises, and their clothing was not torn. She said if they had been fighting, they had stopped by the time she arrived. However, the older of the two men had urinated on himself and was not able to stand on his own, and was then transported to South Shore Hospital. The other man was taken home by Peters.

Peters said her narrative was to document the Red Lion Inn had served both the men "into extreme intoxication." "Both individuals were too drunk to place into protective custody. It was my fear that one or the other would fall in the cell and severely hurt themselves or they would drown in their own vomit."

On Wednesday Feb. 26, 2003, officers were called to the Red Lion Inn in response to a reported fight. Upon arrival, Sgt. Quigley said he found broken glass on the floor and an overturned table. He also observed two men, one of whom was being restrained by a security guard and the other had blood on his shirt. Upon questioning one of the men, Quigley found he was too intoxicated to speak in full sentences. The manager was advised to closely monitor the sobriety of his patrons.

Ordelheide was not available for comment by press time.

Middle-high school vandals are being sought

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While the first day of school was deemed a huge success by principals at all three schools, what happened at the middle-high school the night before has caused much dismay for members of the Cohasset School Department.

At 12:10 a.m. early last Wednesday morning, just hours before school was to start, police received a call from what they assume was a neighbor, who said two young males had used a step ladder to get up onto the roof of the school at the back by the loading dock.

Two security cameras were ripped out of their mounting on the exterior of the school, as well as six pine shrubs, which had just been planted as part of the new landscaping outside the school. The shrubs and cameras were recovered, but Police Chief Robert Jackson said he estimates "several thousand dollars worth of damage," was done.

"This is really a slap in all of our faces," said Supt. Edward Malvey, adding that this kind of incident is not typical in Cohasset.

Jackson said by the time officers arrived on the scene, the vandals were already gone. It does not look as if anyone entered the building. Jackson said he is waiting for fingerprint results that will hopefully help catch the people responsible.

Because the cameras are used strictly for surveillance by someone inside the school, they did not record the incident. They were purchased last year as a precautionary measure, to allow continual monitoring of the outside of the building.

"It would have been nice to have had a recording," Jackson said.

He also hopes the person who made the call, who he assumes is a neighbor to the school, will get in touch with police again, because the name left at the station was not recognizable as anyone in town, and the police have been unable to follow up.

Jackson said from time to time, incidents like this happen, but "It is not terribly common." Also, because the school is newly renovated, incidents like this are "more of a sticking point."

"It was a shock to see that happen," Malvey said, adding that he doesn't think Cohasset students are to blame for the incident.

Jackson said the incident is "actively under investigation by the department."

"I'm hoping we'll find who did it and take them to court," he said.

Centralizing bus stops could get green light

Because buses sometimes make one stop, then another only two or three bus lengths away, the School Committee began discussing consolidating bus stops to have more children at central areas. Less stops could mean less time on the bus.

School Committee Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts thinks centralizing stops is a great idea, because children walking a little more will fit perfectly with the campaign the Board of Health has been working on to promote the health benefits of walking.

"Kids don't get enough exercise," she said.

Litchfield said students — some of whom only live three miles from school — have been good natured about the lengthy commute..

"I can't say enough about them. I don't think we gave out one behavior strip last year," she said.

But those walking farther to bus stops aren't the only students that could get more exercise.

Due to more students at Osgood than expected, children in grades 1-3 who live on Fair Oaks Lane and parts of Sohier Street are returning to "walker" status. Each bus can carry 71 students maximum, and the routes in those areas were almost completely full before the kindergarten students started last Friday.

"It's the law," said Litchfield, who added that for safety's sake, a change had to be made immediately.

Kindergarten students will continue to be picked up by the school bus.

Children on those streets had been picked up due to construction at Deer Hill School, which has been completed, making it safe for children to walk again. The work involved truck traffic along the roadway and vehicles entering and exiting the school area.

"This is how it goes in a district this size," Litchfield said.

No final decisions on bus stop changes have been made and the matter is still being considered. In the meantime, any problems with bus routes should be directed to the principal of the school to which a child attends, the School Committee said.

School is off to a great start

Principals from all three Cohasset schools said school began last week on a very good note. While minor kinks will need to worked out, the general consensus is, everything will fall into place as the school year proceeds.

Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan said she heard one second grader say, as he headed for the buses, "This was the best day of my life!" She also said that on the first day, teachers held up signs to organize students outside before heading to their classrooms, and with the rain on the second day, children proceeded right to their classrooms as if it had been an ordinary day in October.

New Deer Hill Principal Keith Gauley reported the same success, and said "It couldn't have gone better." However, for his school as well as Osgood, the lack of activity aides has caused a bit of a challenge, to which he has a short-term solution. Reaching into his inside jacket pocket, he said, "I'm permanently carrying my own whistle to help out with cafeteria and recess duties." [Activity aides were cut due to budget constraints.]

Principal Mike Jones said the first day at the middle-high school also went smoothly. "A lot could have gone wrong, but nothing did," he said. The only minor issue was morning traffic when parents dropped off their children. Jones thinks the problem will iron itself out over time. He suggested parents try dropping students off closer to 7:05 rather than 7:15 a.m. to alleviate some of the gridlock.

Overall, Jones said, "We're looking forward to the rest of the year."

School board miffed over lunch menu edict

the Board of Health may be overstepping its authority.

"They can control vending machines in town," Malvey said, adding he doesn't have clarification regarding any other changes the health board can make.

The new "in-house" food service program is offering much healthier food choices than have been available in the past. Lunch program manager Robert Levy, who is the former Chartwells manager and now works for the town, said many of the suggested changes have already been made, including switching to frozen yogurt and ice pops, offering only water and 100 percent juice, and the overhaul of snacks in vending machines.

"We're moving forward, way more than everyone else in the state," he said.

Levy told the School Committee at its meeting last Thursday, healthier options haven't affected sales and the overhaul is helping the mission of the Board of Health to promote healthy eating for the students in the community.

"We haven't had a hitch and the numbers are up over last year already," he said.

However, the school year only started last Wednesday.

Members of the School Committee — while in favor of offering more healthy choices for students — are concerned

"Do they have the jurisdiction to tell us this?"

— Mark DeGiacomo, School Committee

about the Board of Health's suggestion to provide a "junk" free day, and think such changes could affect revenue. They also questioned whether the Board of Health even has the authority to request the schools make the changes.

"I'm not saying we need to balance the budget on fried foods," DeGiacomo said, but added, "We have to break even."

School Committee member Pat Martin agreed, and said with fewer choices, some students might opt to bring their lunch, cutting into lunch program revenue.

"Options are great, but to constrict it to one day when people don't have choices, I think it's not going to be effective," she said. "Is it going to change behavior, or if I can't have pasta on Friday, am I just going to bring a peanut butter and fluff from home?"

However, Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts said members should "keep an open mind," because the program could be helpful in getting students to eat better, but School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said children shouldn't have it forced on them

"Sometimes you feel like eating healthy, sometimes you don't," he said.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the "healthier food choices" directive applies to the three schools, with particular emphasis on the middle-high school where students are offered a lot more options. Obesity in young children is one of the biggest issues in the country, and he said it is a problem that needs to be addressed.

"We wanted to start something," he said about the "junk" free day, which will be the first in a series of initiatives by the board to help children get in the habit of making healthy food choices.

Because of the change in management of the school's food services, the Board of Health thinks this is a perfect time to step in because the menu will no longer be restricted by the company. Malvey did not renew Chartwells Educational Dining Services' contract this year because of a deficit in the lunch program. The company had served Cohasset schools for 15 years.

Godzik said the board does have the jurisdiction to direct the schools in their food program, and that "We have the ability to write regulations," including "Virtually anything pertaining to public health." However, he said the health department would rather work in a cooperative manner.

Godzik said the board is currently working to put together a School Nutrition Advisory Committee to come up with a set of certain healthy food standards. The committee will narrow down, "What sort of carbohydrates, what sorts of fats, what sorts of this and that and the other thing," make up a healthy meal, he said.

This week, letters are being sent out, asking for participation in the new committee. Godzik said prospective members include Health Education Coordinator Mike Gill, Chairman of the Board of Health Steve Bobo, Board of Health member Peggy Chapman, who is also a nurse with children in the school system, Jacky Fitts, who has children in the school system, two nutritionists, Jane Lanzilotti, and Paula Pozniac, as well as Levy and Tebbetts.

Godzik said he expects positive responses from all who will receive the letters and hopes to have their first meeting Friday, Sept. 12.

However, even with the Board of Health pushing forward, DeGiacomo said the new initiatives are too much too soon.

"It's a huge burden to try to do it now," he said. "Thanks for your input, but Rome wasn't built in a day."

Avalon wants first dibs over Cedarmere on sewer

Says town is being unfair

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

AvalonBay isn't going to sit back and let Cedarmere budge it out of line for a potential sewer hookup.

It is unlikely there would be sewer capacity for either the proposed 200-unit Avalon project off Route 3A or the proposed 105-unit Cedarmere, a 55-plus senior condominium complex slated for the former Hayes Estate off Beechwood Street.

But Avalon officials say — if there is — then the Avalon project has prior rights to that capacity.

The debate and potential legal wrangle may be opening up a new era in sewer issues which have plagued the town for more than a generation. Cohasset is under a court order to fix its wastewater woes which, for the most part, have involved sewering homes with failed septic systems that were polluting local waterways.

Since the sewer treatment plant was upgraded and the Central Sewer District expanded in the late 1990s – most of those angling for additional hookups were existing homes in desperate straits. Town meetings subsequently voted to extend service to the Lily Pond area and Mendel Road.

Now two, huge multi-million dollar developments are seeking sewer connections. And the sewer stakes couldn't be higher.

In an effort to clarify the issue, Sewer Commission Chairman Ray Kasperowicz wrote to the ZBA Sept 8 stating any additional capacity that can be developed through expansion of the Waste Water Treatment Plant is designated for Little Harbor. That area was named a priority area in the state Department of Environmental Protection's legal action against the town.

Avalon got that message about lack of capacity early on — but Cedarmere's interest in the town sewer, has caught Avalon's eye. Avalon's ability to move forward with the project may hinge on whether its on-site treatment system can pass environmental muster.

Avalon's first preference was to tie into the municipal sewer. But the developer was sent packing, so to speak, early in the hearing process and has "pursued, at great cost and expense, other means of providing sewer for its project, culminating in an on-site sewage discharge plant and a groundwater discharge permit," stated Avalon attorney Steven Schwartz in a Sept. 4, 2003 letter to the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The Avalon on-site treatment system has been deemed woefully inadequate by the Water Commission, which has urged the ZBA to deny issuing Avalon a comprehensive permit. Avalon has filed for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law that allows it to skirt local zoning regulations in exchange for providing some affordable housing.

Cedarmere developers have filed under the town's new Senior Overlay District that allows higher density in exchange for senior housing that would include some affordable units. In their reading of a draft of the town's Master Plan, senior housing would take priority for sewer capacity.

Schwartz said Avalon reserves its right to amend its comprehensive permit application to seek a municipal sewer connection.

"We would also like to highlight the preferential treatment that the developers of the Cedarmere project have received at the hands of the Planning Board, especially with regard to sewerage, when compared to the treatment of the Avalon project by the Planning Board, Water Commission and other opponents," Schwartz wrote.

Although required to present sufficient information including soil evaluation and percolation test data under the Senior Overlay District bylaw, the Planning Board granted preliminary approval of the Cedarmere project without that information, Schwartz pointed out.

"Planning Board members, including those who have appeared at Avalon ZBA hearings in opposition to this (Avalon) project, have spoken glowingly of the Cedarmere proposal, not withstanding the failure of that project to address the most fundamental sewer questions," he stated.

Schwartz said the different treatment of the two projects is clear. The Avalon project, therefore, cannot be denied or unreasonably conditioned based on sewer issues because those requirements have not been applied equally to subsidized and non-subsidized housing.

"We urge the Zoning Board of use the sense of fairness that the members have displayed to far in this process, and to approve the Avalon project without the imposition of unreasonable conditions that are not being imposed on other developments in town," Schwartz wrote.

Cedarmere developer David Calhoun said Monday, the project is still seeking to connect to the town's sewer system.

Avalon hearing will wrap up on Monday

Road, a vocal opponent, said the density of the project — which is the biggest housing development in Cohasset history — is his "single greatest concern" because of the impact on schools and town services.

"Is there a magic number?" asked ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick.

"I want zero, they want 200," Palmer said, adding the magic number can't be determined without first determining how much money Avalon stands to make from the project.

If the ZBA decides to grant Avalon a comprehensive permit, it can add conditions. But if those conditions affect the financial feasibility of the project, Avalon can appeal to the state.

To that end, Jacobs — who made it clear the purpose of the financial review was not to whittle down the project to some profit level — said it is important the ZBA understands how conditions that address valid health, safety and other concerns could impact the project's economics. Jacobs said the project couldn't exceed the 10 percent profitability threshold set by the Massachusetts Housing and Finance Agency.

This past Monday's hearing was another in a continuing series of three-hour-long marathon sessions that have become a common occurrence for the ZBA and Avalon. Town officials, engineers, lawyers, consultants, Avalon officials and town residents jammed into the musty downstairs meeting room and struggled to stay focused as the ZBA continued to wade through all the complexities and listen to comments from both sides.

Michael Westcott, 2 River Road, an Avalon critic, questioned whether Avalon, at $6.2 million, is intentionally paying an inflated price for the land to increase the cost of the project.

Jacobs explained that Mass Housing would appraise the property and if it found the price was too high, it wouldn't allow the loan to be used to finance the overage.

Scott Dale of Avalon took umbrage at the discussion.

"That's fraud," he said about allegations the land is overvalued. "We wouldn't do that — we have provided the board with an accurate purchase and sale agreement."

Dale said Avalon would have "loved to pay less" but the deal was negotiated three years ago when the economy was better.

While Schwartz of Avalon said the question on closing the hearing should hinge on whether the ZBA has all the information it needs — DeRensis said it wouldn't do any harm keeping the hearing open another week.

"Maybe something valuable will come of it," he said.

Chittick said the hearing would resume at 7 p.m. Monday and close at 7:30 p.m., when the ZBA is scheduled to conduct hearings on other matters. Anyone submitting written critiques of the Avalon financial report should try to have those in by Friday, he said.

Once the hearing closes, the ZBA will begin its deliberations on whether to issue Avalon a comprehensive permit. Deliberations are open to the public.

Pat Martin speaks out about her silence on Klimko issue

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

School Committee member Pat Martin said she does have opinions regarding Supt. Edward Malvey's decision to keep Business Manager Ivan Klimko on the job, but meetings of the committee are not the place to voice them.

Martin, who serves as a domestic violence intervention specialist at Wellspring in Hull, developed a professional relationship with Klimko's wife and accompanied her to Hingham District Court on Aug. 5, where Mrs. Klimko gave a victim's impact statement. Klimko, who has worked for the school system for more than two years, pled guilty to domestic assault and battery. He was sentenced to two and a half years of supervised probation and is also required to participate in a batterer's program..

Because of Martin's professional involvement with Klimko's wife, she has been recused from all discussion surrounding the trial so as not to create a conflict of interest.

"Do I have an opinion as a parent, sure. Do I have an opinion professionally, sure," she said. Martin went on to say that her opinions should only be discussed in the appropriate setting.

Martin's remarks were in response to a letter run in the Sept. 4 Cohasset Mariner which stated Martin's expertise in the area of domestic violence should make her a logical spokeswoman for the committee.

Thanking the School Committee for responding so quickly and publicly to his last letter, printed Aug.21, Scott O'Grady, 115 Sohier St., stated he is still "disappointed by the board's support of a decision that I believe is harmful to our town, our schools, and most importantly, our schoolchildren," and said he still has questions about the issue, which include Martin's thoughts.

"I would also like to hear from Pat Martin, who is a professional in the area of domestic violence," O'Grady stated. "Rather than the grounds for recusal from this debate, I feel that Martin's expertise would make her the logical spokesperson for the board on this issue."

Klimko was initially charged with attempted murder and was placed on administrative leave without pay for a period of time, but resumed his duties at the school department when that charge was dropped due to insufficient evidence.

Arthur Lehr keeps park looking good

place," he said.

The shiny red tractor he uses on the fields today is a 1950 Ford tractor. "It's an old timer, it gets kind of tired," he said, which is why Lehr has to mow different areas in installments.

He said it takes about three days to mow the three fields at Wheelwright Park, and four or five days to mow the "cap" of the town landfill, which is on about 30-40 acres of land.

"There's one section I won't mow," he said, which he describes as being about the length of a football field with extremely steep sides. After almost tumbling down the slopes on a few occasions, tractor and all, he decided enough was enough and now bypasses that section.

But Lehr's tractors haven't been used strictly for mowing, he said his other tractor, a Model A Ford tractor named "Cousin It" after the popular 1960s television character from the Addams Family, served as "training wheels" for his three sons when they were learning how to drive a car. He jokes that people used to call tractors like his a "poor man's tractor" because it, like many other tractors of that time, was made out of an old car that had been adapted to serve as a tractor. His Model A tractor has a long history, as it was used in Scituate many years ago before he brought it to Cohasset.

Because the areas he mows are so large, Lehr said he only cuts them a few times a year. Otherwise, he wouldn't have any time left for his many other committees and town efforts. Mowing the fields is just one of the many acts of volunteerism Lehr makes, which is why he was named Citizen of the Year in February.

Over the years, Lehr has served in many capacities, including his role as the Emergency Management Director, Scoutmaster of Boy Scout Troop 28 for which he is now in his 25th year, and 20 years on the Recycling Committee. He has participated in so many other volunteer projects over the years, that it seems he has been involved with every worthwhile cause in the town.

"It's a beautiful town," he said, adding that his motivating factor for helping out in so many areas stems from a deep love of the town and the people of it.

"I like the feeling of not just taking. I give a little bit back."

COHASSET'S WEEK

Special Town Meeting

Selectmen have not set a definite date for the upcoming special fall Town Meeting, but are looking at Nov. 17 as a possibility. Town Manager Mark Haddad said this seems to be the best date, in light of other meetings and holidays. Selectmen will finalize the date at the Sept. 16 meeting.

Tide gate repairs

Beginning Monday Sept. 15, construction will begin on the new tide gates, which regulate the waters which flow from James Brook to the harbor and back. Construction is expected to last until Sept. 30.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said workers are going to be "replacing and updating" the gates, with the hope improved self-regulating gates will allow a greater flow of salt water into the marsh and Jacob's Meadow, which will help control the phragmites and ultimately restore the salt marsh.

Phragmites (pronounced Fragmight-ez) are an invasive freshwater plant that further threaten the rehabilitation of the former salt marsh. They grow upwards of 10 feet high, choking out other grasses in the process. The plant's broken stems impede the flow of water and its overgrowth can cut off brook access for fish that eat mosquito larvae.

In 1999, Tutela Engineering replaced the tide gates that were in place and adding a third fall out pipe that increased the amount of water that can drain out of Jacob's Meadow through James Brook and into the Harbor.

But federal officials later charged that Tutela was negligent in its work, not only in the installation process, but also because it failed to seek and receive permits from the Army Corps of Engineers for the project. The tide gates that were installed by the company do not allow enough saltwater into the marsh to kill the phragmites and restore the salt marsh.

Now, the project is finally nearing completion. The new self-regulating gates will allow a greater flow of seawater into the area.

Changes to the town budget

Town Manager Mark Haddad said this year, as a way to help offset budget shortfalls, he would like to change the way money from the sale of school bonds is used.

In the past, money from the sale of bonds has always been certified as free cash, then put into a stabilization fund and used to help pay for school construction.

"We've done it that way because Mike [Buckley] and I feel it should be done that way," Haddad said.

However, this year, the town is "financially stretched," having not received roughly $100,000 in state aid in addition to a larger than usual ice and snow deficit. Haddad thinks by having the money available, it could be used to help offset costs in the budget.

Haddad said Director of Finance Mike Buckley does not agree with him and thinks any money made by bonds should be used to pay them off. This is the first time in six years the two have disagreed on a financial matter, Haddad said.

"I've never disagreed with Mike before," said Selectman Tom Callahan, who was not sure the board should approve something Buckley wasn't in support of.

Haddad said this would be a one time occurrence, and feels it is a reasonable request since the town gained $1.6 million through the sale of the right of way to the MBTA.

"As your chief financial officer, I'm making a recommendation that I'm asking the board to support," Haddad said.

"I'd like to talk to Mike," said Selectman Merle Brown.

Selectmen passed the changes 4-1, with Brown opposed.

Pleasant St. Parfait has changed owners

Selectmen approved a change of ownership of the Pleasant Street Parfait to Steve Zambo of 387 Hatherly Road in Scituate. Zambo said he intends on keeping the restaurant the way it is, but did express interest in getting a permit to sell ice cream at the beach. Selectmen said a "Sunday" license to sell ice cream would have to be approved first by the Board of Health, and would then come back before Selectmen for approval.

School construction nearing conclusion

Still working with neighbors

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

After a few minor snags along the way, the $40 million school construction projects are in the home stretch, with Deer Hill's completion date set for Oct. 3, and the middle-high school by the beginning of December.

School Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford said he couldn't be happier with the results of both schools and gave Selectmen a synopsis of progress to date and what is still left to be completed.

"We're down to the short strokes of it," Spofford said about projects going on at Deer Hill. Because some materials were not sent to the general contractor on time, there was worry the project would not be completed in the time frame contractors were aiming for. However, those details were worked out and the exterior work that needs to be done is well on its way.

"For all intents and purposes, Deer Hill is done," Spofford said, adding that all exterior work is strictly aesthetic.

The School Committee hopes to have a rededication ceremony at the school sometime in October.

For the middle-high school, Spofford said contractors have "met all of our expectations. They've lived up to everything they've said."

Projects are all way ahead of schedule, and Spofford said the company would like to get completely out of the school by the end of fall. There is always the possibility that the schedule could change, and the original deadline of December would be fine with the schools.

One of the most challenging aspects of the project was blasting out the old cement in the former music room in the middle school wing. Spofford said the concrete was much thicker than the architect had originally anticipated, but with a little extra work, it has all been removed.

Because the new layout will provide more segregation between the middle and high school areas, two middle school classrooms were built in the space where the music room was, and the music room will be housed in a different area of the school.

Spofford said issues with neighbors are still being addressed and landscaping with trees is being done to provide privacy for those who live close to the school. Lighting is another major issue and Spofford said the schools are working with neighbors to help find a solution to the problem.

"We have an obligation to be good neighbors," Spofford said, but adequate lighting for events at the school is necessary.

Spofford said financially, the projects are right on course and "We don't believe we'll be asking the town for more money."

School maintenance plan

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he will have a new school maintenance plan ready for the spring Town Meeting. Because so much time and money has been spent on the new construction, Selectmen said it would be nice to have a log kept of different areas of maintenance, such as the replacement of air filters, and the like. With good records, the schools would be able to prevent many of the issues that over the years that caused the old buildings to fall into disrepair.

Sgt. Quigley praised

Police Chief Robert Jackson wrote a letter of commendation for Sgt. William Quigley, thanking him for his efforts in developing and directing the first-ever, Cohasset Student Police Academy.

"You enlisted the help of almost half the department to participate in this worthwhile initiative that allowed 12 Cohasset High School juniors and seniors to get a first-hand look at what it's like to be a police officer," Jackson wrote.

"Your efforts are commendable and bring credit to you and the department."

No flowers at flagpole

Selectmen have rejected the idea of planting flowers around the flagpole on the Town Common. Merle Brown said he spoke with Mary Larson of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission, who had expressed interest in planting a circular flower bed at the base of the flagpole. Selectmen asked whether the flowers would be changed every season and who would be responsible for upkeep and watering. After some discussion, Selectmen decided the flagpole looks fine the way it is.

On the second anniversary of September 11

It's hard to believe it's been two years since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks that changed this country and the world so profoundly. Even the glorious weather this week is a vivid reminder of Sept. 11, 2001, a day of shimmering beauty on the East coast, of breathtaking blue skies and sunshine, that ended in horror. Two years later and it is still difficult to grasp that the magnificent Twin Towers in New York City are gone and more than 3,000 innocent lives lost.

In an instant of unfathomable tragedy, everything changed on Sept. 11, 2001. Since that unforgettable day, we have come together as a nation in important ways. People are no longer afraid to show their patriotism, although there are certainly fewer flags waving today than two years ago, or even last year at this time.

In the two years that have passed, fervent patriotism has given way to a deeper reflection of what it means to be American and what America's role is in the world. As President Bush's speech to the nation demonstrated on Sunday, we are still trying to sort out what the proper response is to a world that is filled with the threat of terrorism.

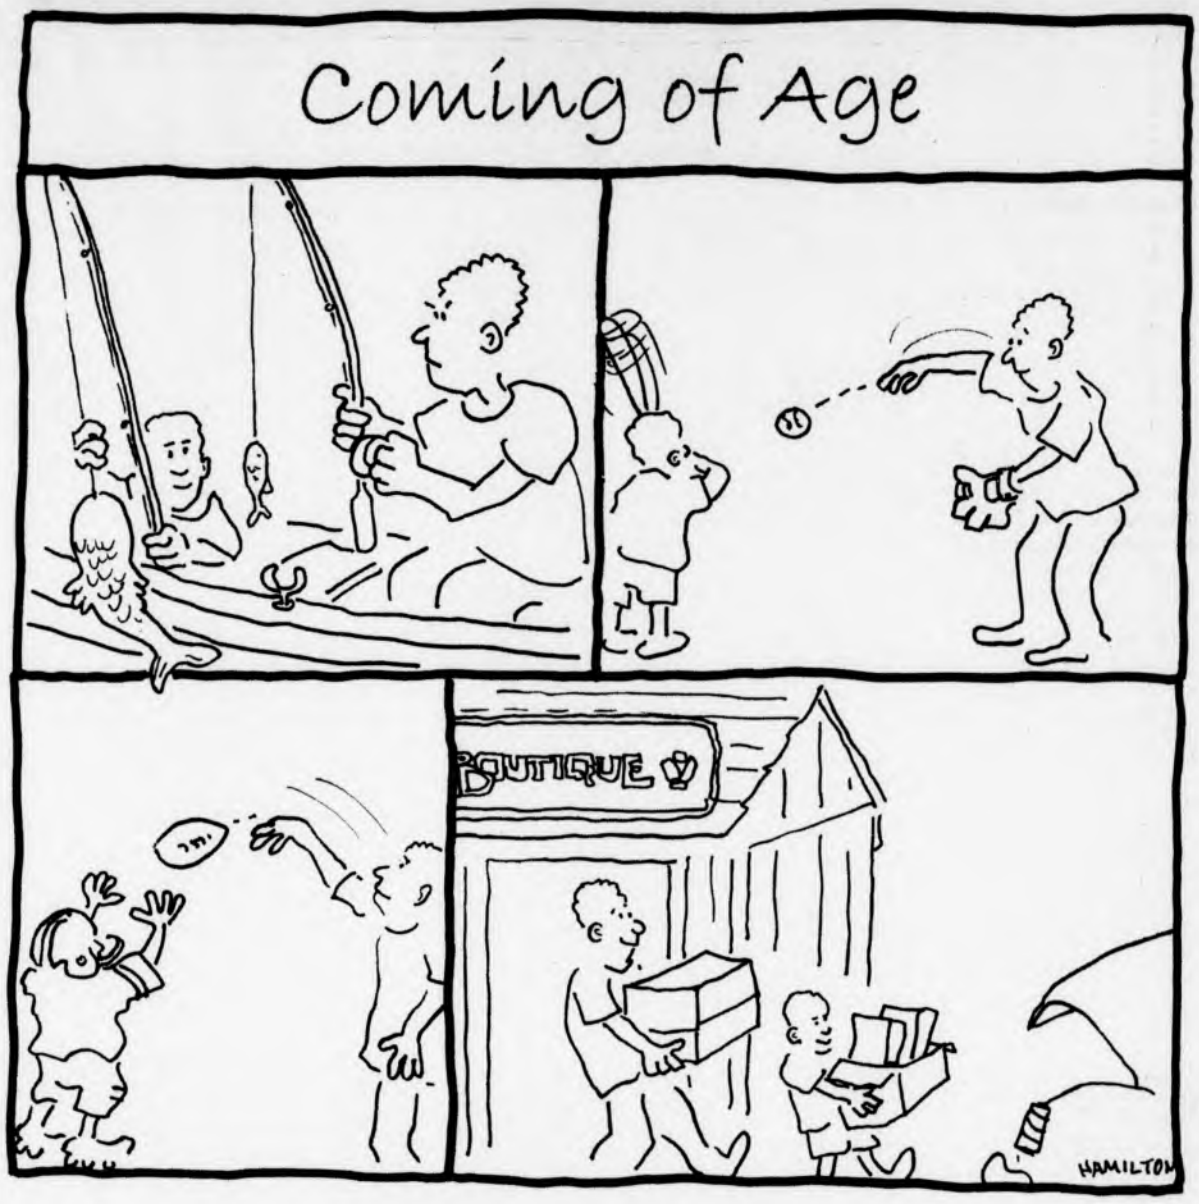
On an individual level, Sept. 11 made people reflect on their own personal values in a way they had never done before. Suddenly, the value of family, community and personal sacrifice took on a new importance. The public felt a new regard for firefighters, police officers and military personnel who put their lives on the line every day. As a society we became more interested in the heroic sacrifices in our own communities than in celebrity worship.

On Sept. 11, 2001, the nation was dealt a terrible blow, and in many ways we are still healing. It will take a long time. The psychic wounds run deep. The images of the planes flying into the towers, and the towers falling, played over and over again, still have the power to sicken. A power blackout brings panicked thoughts of a terrorist attack. Will it happen again? Are we safer than we were two years ago?

Last year cities and towns all over the nation held ceremonies to recognize the first anniversary of Sept. 11. But the wound was too raw, too painful to feel all over again. Another year has given more perspective and the war in Iraq has shifted and re-focused our attention from Sept. 11 to new battles that are just as frightening.

Two years ago President Bush warned us that we were in the early stages of a new kind of war with an unseen enemy. That war brought us to Afghanistan to rid that devastated country of the Taliban and Al-Qaeda elements. Now, we are told that rebuilding Iraq will cost billions and billions of dollars, all in an effort to bring stability to the heart of the Middle East and help root out the seeds of terrorism.

It is now obvious that the consequences of Sept. 11 will be with us for years and that we will be asked to commit lives and considerable financial resources to keep the world safe from terrorism. In all likelihood, this will be the task of the 21st century. The work has just begun. But as we remember Sept. 11, 2001, we can't help but realize it's a task we must undertake. There really is no other choice.



POLITICAL NOTES

Local GOP news

At its last meeting the Cohasset Republican Town Meeting voted three new members to the committee: Gabriel Gomez, Stuart Ivimey and Jamie Williams. Plans are underway for a social evening in October for regular and associate members and all interested parties.

Even though the annual picnic had to be moved indoors at the last minute, the rain did not dampen the mood. Heather Palmer was able to swiftly reorganize to the new venue and had the party continue without a glitch. A wide range of guests attended to hear keynote speaker former Congressman Mickey Edwards. Senator Robert Hedlund and Congressional candidate Mike Jones also delivered a few words to the audience updating them on their campaigns and upcoming events.

Dates to mark on your calendar: Sept. 24 - a fund raiser for Mike Jones at the Scituate Country Club starting at 6:30 p.m.; Sept. 30 - 7:30 p.m. - the next monthly meeting of the Town Committee at the Lightkeeper's Cottage.

Have questions on town senior project

TO THE EDITOR:

If Avalon and Cedarmere are built as planned, they will add more than 300 units of housing to our town. Do we really need an additional 150-200 units being planned by the Selectmen on the Cook Estate and the adjacent 9.8 acre town-owned property?

Last summer, we became aware of plans by the Senior Housing Committee to develop a parcel of undeveloped town-owned property. For months we attended meetings and listened to discussions by committee members that greatly concerned us. Some of the subjects:

- Giving the town-owned land away to a non-profit group for $1.
- Ways to structure the development to avoid paying real estate taxes on the property.
- Using up to 80 percent of the Community Preservation fund to promote this senior housing development, despite plans to have only 25 percent of the units dedicated to low income seniors.
- Developing a large public senior housing complex on the combined Cook Estate and the town owned land.
- Hiring consultants to perform a second feasibility study to develop town owned land.

We became increasingly concerned about the impact of these plans, especially in light of the proposed Avalon and Cedarmere developments, and we expressed our concerns to the committee. Suddenly, the Senior Housing Meetings were stopped and a member of the Senior Housing Committee was appointed by the Selectmen to an 'at-large' position on the Community Preservation Committee. The control for the feasibility study and the negotiations with the Cook Estate were given to the selectmen and taken into executive session, behind closed doors, ending citizen questions and input.

We filed a freedom of information request, asking for documentation relating to this proposed development. At a subsequent meeting Mr. Haddad refused to release any information about the Cook Estate and tried to convince us to abandon the request. He assured us any development would pay taxes, the land would not be given away and the town would need to approve the plans. However, citing the executive session exemption, he would not provide any information about what those plans are. Documentation we know exists was withheld. Information the town was willing to provide was not directly related to our request. We currently have an open case with the State Department of Records, which oversees the public records laws of Massachusetts. Today, a full month after the public records request was submitted, we do not have the records we seek.

Whether the citizens of this town agree or disagree with this project, they have a right to be heard. The public deserves to know about real estate development agreements the town is negotiating and the potential use of our tax dollars to facilitate this growth. Ultimately, it is up to the town to decide. We need more than a two-minute presentation at town meeting before being asked to vote on a multi-million dollar project. We are concerned that this plan will be so far down the road before it is presented that we, the taxpayers, will not have an opportunity to have our voices heard. We recognize the Selectmen and Town Manager may not be able to disclose the financial details of their negotiations without impacting the town's negotiating position, but there are fundamental issues that can, and should, be discussed in a public forum before we are committed to a specific plan.

We have questions that deserve to be answered:

- questions about whether there is a need for senior housing in town beyond the private developments that are currently being planned,
- questions about the use of Community Preservation Funds to promote housing on undeveloped land that will not be limited to low or moderate income seniors,
- questions about whether this amount of growth is necessary or desirable,
- questions about the impact of this growth on our towns services and questions about the use of town resources to aid in real estate development.

We strongly encourage our Selectmen and Town Manager to open discussions about these issues and allow the taxpayers the right to be heard. The officials of this town do not always know what is best for us. We find ourselves echoing the request made by the Cedarmere opponents: Please listen.

Heartfelt visit to New York City

MATT GILL

Recalling some memorable moments from a summer that's quickly coming to an end, my trip to New York City in July stands out as the most significant.

In July, I traveled to New York City, to visit Engine 54/Ladder 4/Battalion 9, a fire station that over the past twenty four months has become an increasingly personal landmark, as its the building where my cousin Paul used to work. Located on the corner of 48th Street and 8th Avenue, Engine 54 or The Pride of Midtown as its known throughout the city is just blocks from Times Square, and situated in the heart of Manhattan.

Since September 11, 2001, I've visited the station three times, and each time has been a deeply moving experience. Rows of rubber boots and coats, and lots of heavy machinery aren't the most stirring attractions, but when combined with the memory of a lost loved one, and what these men sacrificed on that day and many others—emotion stirs quickly.

During my visits there, I have found I have very little to say. But the guys who work there, the men of Engine 54, are moving on with their work and their lives. In order to continue and survive in their dangerous line of work, they have to.

Having raised some money for the station throughout the year, I visited the station again in July, but this occasion was extra special because Paul's sister Michelle met me at the station. When I stepped out of the taxi at noon, Michelle was already there, and from one quick glance, visibly emotional. After all, Paul was her only brother.

During the visit, we toured the firehouse and chatted with the men currently manning the station, some of them friends of Paul's and his former chief, and guys who came on the job after Paul and never knew him. It was a hot Sunday, and at 8 1/2 months pregnant, Michelle was moving pretty slow. Sunlight streaming in from the station's open bay doors, illuminated some of the artwork and souvenirs that lined the station's walls. Paintings and memorabilia, and framed within a small glass case outside are pictures of the men who lost their lives on September 11th.

Both athletic and artistic, Paul was just 34, when he and 14 other firefighters from Engine 54 headed into The Marriot Hotel — one of the smaller buildings within the World Trade Center complex. It would be their final call.

Growing up in Weymouth, my two sisters and I didn't often see our cousins Paul and Michelle as they were raised in Queens, but we do share a handful of nice memories. There was the trip our families took together to Battery Park and The Statue of Liberty in 1986, soon after the landmark's 100 year anniversary. Michelle was in high school at the time, and my sisters were just a few years younger, so their hairstyles were considerably inflated at the time, and in fashion at 10 years old, my socks were stretched to my knees.

Although the photos, flowers, and other personal mementos have long since been removed from The World Trade Center site, free-standing artwork commemorating the event can still be found. Here, just a few blocks from Ground Zero, hundreds of ceramic tiles express support for the United States, and the victims of September 11.

Located in the heart of Manhattan, Engine 54 —and the men who work there —are known throughout New York City as The Pride of Midtown.

In 1992, my family traveled down to New Jersey to attend Michelle's wedding. As a sophomore in high school at the time, I remember discussing my latest sporting endeavor —wrestling —with Paul at the Sunday morning brunch. Paul had been a wrestling star in New York state, and knew about things like "the guillotine" and cutting weight —things that only wrestlers would know —and I was eager to learn from him.

About six years my senior, Paul was a Mets fan, and when I think of him, my thoughts are of him showing me his sketch books, and calling me "Mattie" with a thick New York accent.

Paul was married too, and as the years passed between our visits, he would go on to become both a firefighter, a carpenter, and an artist, but most importantly a father of two — Aaron and Joshua.

Today, some of the artwork that Paul hoped would be part of another career, brightens the walls of Engine 54 and another fire house in Brooklyn, and a framed copy of one of Paul's favorite pieces, was sent as a gift to President Clinton.

The name Paul Gill can also be found on several monuments and plaques that have been constructed around the city, as well as on the fence of names that today stands guard at the Trade Center site. During my weekend trip, I took an extended walk through the city — passing the

Joys of being telemarketed

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

After all the complaining I've done about the folks who call me on the telephone at dinner time to sell me a time-share in Chelsea you might think I'd be the first to sign up for the state's "Do Not Call" list, which is Big Brother's way of keeping telemarketers at arms length, at least until we finish eating.

But no . . .

Now that I have reached what most people refer to as "the Golden Years" of retirement and have some free time between taking pills and watching the Teletubbies on Channel 2, I find that engaging telemarketers in conversation a good way to pass the time and sharpen the edges of a mind grown rounded.

Just the other night, as I was sitting down to an evening meal of tater tots, chicken tenders and lima beans washed down with a glass of room-temperature merlot, the phone rang.

ME - Hello.

HIM - Hello. This is Harold and I'm calling from North American Veeblefetzer. How are you tonight?

ME - Oh, not so good. The arthritis is kicking up again. It's so bad I'm having trouble sleeping. It's the right arm again. The one I broke leaping out of the bordello window that time in Hamburg.

HIM - I'm sorry to hear that, sir. I'm calling to tell you about an offer . . .

ME - Oh, don't be sorry. The polizei didn't catch me. They wouldn't have done much of anything to me anyway. Hamburg is a pretty wide open town. They have this district called "the Reeperbahn.' Have you ever been to Hamburg?

HIM - No, sir. I'm calling to tell you about an offer . . .

ME - It's sorta like the old Combat Zone in Boston, the Reeperbahn is. Surely you'd been to the Combat Zone in Boston.

HIM - No, I haven't. But I'm calling to tell . . .

ME - You haven't been to the Combat Zone in Boston? Where are you calling from anyway?

HIM - Des Moines, Iowa, sir, and I'm calling to . . .

ME - Des Moines, Iowa, eh! Now you trot right down to the Hotel Fort Des Moines and ask for an elevator operator named Louise and tell her that . . . Hello? Hello?

See what I mean when I say engage the telemarketer in conversation? The ultimate victory comes when the telemarketer hangs up on you!

When a telemarketer calls, depending on the mood I'm in, I can assume as many personalities as Tracy Ullman.

I can be stern.

ME - Hello.

HIM - Hello. My name is Norman and I'm calling from . . .

ME - How did you get this number?

This puts the telemarketer at an immediate disadvantage. For the rest of the conversation, if there is more, he is speaking up to you. He is at his best when he is talking down to you.

I can be confused.

ME - Hello.

HIM - Hello. My name is Gordon and I'm calling from North American Veeblefetzer.

ME - What?

HIM - North American Veeblefetzer.

ME - I already paid that.

HIM - It's not a bill. It's an offer to . . .

ME - What?

A few more moments like that and, I guarantee you, the only offer the telemarketer will accept is your offer to let him alone so he can finish his dinner.

HEALTH NOTES

School lunch content on the health board menu

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As you know, the combination of excess weight and lack of exercise is fast becoming the nation's major health problem. Much of the problem is that proper nutrition is not being practiced in our schools. School lunches almost always offer burgers, fries, pizza, and other high fat and carbohydrate choices. There are usually healthy calories offered as well, but most young people will opt for the fatty stuff when they have a choice.

There is little reason not to constrain their choices to healthy food as a part of their education.

In our school system, the school lunch program is now under a different management. Chartwells, long-time food service caterer for the school lunch program no longer provides school cafeteria meals. Instead, the school will be responsible, not only for the meals, but their content. A major issue for the Board of Health in this context was the fact that the meals were not always providing menus, which would foster healthy eating habits for our children. Accordingly, we look on this management change as an opportunity to improve the quality of the meals and other food provided to our kids while they are in school.

With the new change in management of our school's food programs, the menus will no longer be restricted to Chartwell's plan. The Board is interested in providing guidelines for healthy eating habits for our children. Accordingly, the board feels it would be appropriate to organize a School Nutrition Advisory Committee. Candidates to serve on such a group are School Health Coordinator Mike Gill; Food Services Coordinator Bob Levy, Board of Health member Peggy Chapman, a nurse, with children in the school system; and Jacky Fitts, who has children in the school system. Two Nutritionists, Jane Lanzilotti, and Paula Pozniac, would also be on the committee. Bob Levy is the former Chartwell's Manager, and now works for the Town.

School Committee member Chartis Tebbetts suggested that the School Committee had the ultimate responsibility for ensuring an appropriate school environment for students and that the Board as well as the students and school management should have a say in the makeup of the committee. Also, that the PSO should be involved. The Board of Health fully concurs with this approach, and has also included discussions with the Selectmen as a part of the process of organizing the committee. For example, Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris suggested the inclusion of a student on the committee, since they would be eating what was on the menu. Chartis concurred, and pointed out kids are so busy that the committee would need at least two students.

At present, we believe the next step will be to discuss the concept with the school authorities as Chartis has suggested and, pending the outcome of this discussion, we will decide what to do.

In the meantime, the purpose of the committee is to provide guidance and advice relating to healthy practices for the menus and vending machines which serve food to our children while in school. Anyone wishing to comment or participate in this issue is welcome to do so. Please contact the Board of Health at 781-383-4116.

Joint health fair

For the first time, following a plan to work more closely with our adjoining towns, the Cohasset, Hull and Scituate Boards of Health had free health screenings to all residents of the South Shore Tuesday at the Second Congregational Church.

Scituate, Hull, and Cohasset jointly sponsored the event, but exhibitors and visitors came from the entire South Shore. Osteoporosis screening was available from the Visiting Nurse Association of Norwell; vision and hearing screening by the Lions District 33 Eyemobile; and cholesterol and blood sugar screening provided by the Rotary Clubs of Hull and Scituate. Visitors came from Hingham, Hanover, Marshfield, and Weymouth, as well as the sponsoring towns. In all, the fair hosted nearly a 100 visitors. This program, sponsored by the Cohasset Board of Health, is an effort for the towns to work more closely to address our mutual health concerns.

As discussed previously in Health Notes articles, the screenings include not only conventional medical assessment, such as cholesterol and blood sugar; blood pressure and osteoporosis, on-the-spot dental advice and the opportunity to look at other therapies, sometimes defined as accessory or alternative treatment. Such therapies appearing at the fair included advice from a nutritional coach or counsel who visits your house and "evaluates your nutritional status, your eating habits, and recommends eating plans based on your needs… plans recipes; gives advice on nutritional supplements," and advises what's needed for a "total wellness home". Another consultant advised on setting up a state of the art purification and ionization system for your home to rid yourself of "mold, odors, germs". Another was a skin analysis expert. Demonstrations of massage and magnet therapy were also popular.

Of particular interest was the credible evolution of wellness therapy, or the application of holistic evaluation; the inclusion of habits, family activities and history, as well as present condition should be in any health evaluation. Several doctors were represented who espoused holistic methods such as acupuncture, chiropractic, and homeopathy. In all, the fair had a little something for everyone, as well as healthy food and beverages. And finally, public health organizations from the federal level to our own Council on Aging were represented and provided material about their services, including Joe McElroy representing the town's senior walking club.

Refreshments were provided by Stop and Shop, Dunkin Donuts Atlantic Bagel and Starbucks.

To receive a listing of the names and addresses of the health fair participants, or for more information contact Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, public health nurse at the Cohasset Board of Health at 781-383-2210.

Job growth is the key issue behind all the budget talk

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The most significant news in state government last week centered on statistics. There's nothing new about that; the novelty arose from noticing that the numbers were positive.

The state Department of Revenue announced tax collections for the first two months of the fiscal year exceeded expectations by $108 million. That word came a day after Associated Industries of Massachusetts announced its business confidence index climbed into positive territory for the first time in 15 months.

The news about additional revenue added some impetus to conversations, already ongoing, about what items should be funded in a supplemental budget many activists are counting on to save, or at partially restore, their programs of interest. Decision making about that additional budget is probably the main item of discussion for what might be called the cold-stove league at the Statehouse. The pressure to restore funding centers more on use of existing reserves — what remains of them — but good revenue news encouraged the idea that this budget is going to stay balanced, so using reserves is an acceptable strategy to save social programs.

Behind the budget talk, ultimately, lies the question of jobs. Under any administration, but especially one whose guiding principle is that nothing good can come of a tax hike, job growth determines whether politicians can deliver the services the voters demand.

Workers earn and spend. When they earn, that means income taxes, and when they spend, that means sales taxes. Their spending (and the government's, of course) pumps money onto the revenue sheets of Bay State businesses, and that means corporate taxes. For now, much of the good revenue news is driven by tax hikes and by new ways to pay tax bills faster via computer; for long-term budget stability — and voter satisfaction — the number of jobs in Massachusetts must climb. This year it's fluctuated, ticking up and down in small increments.

But rising business confidence has got be a positive sign for the governor, and one that gives him confidence in his own personal prospects. Major problems still attend the task of getting the books balanced for next year — and that task will be extremely simplified if revenues keep coming in above the austerity levels projected, and this year ends with a noticeable surplus.

Beyond that, and trying not to be too cynical about it, look for comprehensive economic planning to start assuming a larger and larger share of the Romney administration's efforts as time goes by. That effort is likely to commence with another restructuring effort at UMass, which is still perceived as; if not broken, then improvable, by the same business leaders who criticized the governor's first effort at reorganization. Romney knows that after they're done doing all they can to suggest George Bush hasn't done anything for the economy, Romney's next on the list; and he wants to be ready.

Objects to Avalon

Zoning Board of Appeals

On behalf of The Board of Directors of The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce we would like to state our objection to the proposed development by Avalon Bay on Route 3A in Cohasset. The 62 acres of land is the last large parcel presently zoned for business. The Chamber of Commerce would like to see Hi Tech (which is the current zoning) and productive businesses there. Cohasset needs to achieve a greater percentage than the 7 percent commercial base it now has. A development such as proposed by Avalon Bay would deprive the Town of needed revenue and indeed increase costs to the Town by way of services and schools.

This enormous development proposed by Avalon Bay would seek to fracture a Town that is attempting to promote business development. The large business site gives the town an opportunity to initiate both light industry, an office park and scores of jobs in the immediate area. We strongly urge the ZBA not to approve the application of Avalon Bay.

We also feel that since you rarely see zoning change from residential to business, we need to preserve the small percentage of commercial zoning we have now.

Parking limits

TO THE EDITOR:

I feel I have to respond to the letter referred to in the Sept. 4, 2003 Cohasset Mariner (page 2). It was written by Judith Cellucci, regarding a parking ticket.

First of all, she states the officers "attitude appalling and offensive." Yet by her letter she wasn't present. She was eating dinner at the Inn. The police officer was doing his/her job. To state that she found a police officer's attitude appalling and offensive is a bit of a reach. Perhaps the officer was doing the job they are employed to do.

She also states her husband 'ran over to approach him, so he could move the car, but was too late." A 15 minute limit is a 15 minute limit.

She then states the officer ticketed the cars next to hers, as well as several other cars that were not parked correctly, even though they were in spaces, and not obstructing other potential vehicles. How can you be parked incorrectly but be in spaces?

To state that one of "Cohasset's finest" was on a rampage is idiotic. consider the parking limits in the village and abide by them.

Section 8 rentals at Avalon complex

TO THE EDITOR:

What are they doing to us?

Cohasset, like so many other towns has apartments whose rent is less than the state defined affordable rent. It has Section 8 rentals. It has Habitat for Humanity dwellings.

And yet, Cohasset like so many towns has been told by the state that they do not have sufficient affordable housing because none of the above counts.

Cohasset, like so many other towns is faced with a big developer coming in under the auspices of 40B to build a mega development whose 'affordable rent' is higher than other apartments in town. A large development that will forever change the makeup of the town. A development that with 75 percent high priced luxury rentals will supposedly bring us up to the state suggested 10 percent affordable housing units.

And then at the Sept. 8 ZBA meeting it was disclosed that the developer is planning that 50 percent of the affordable units, at least 25, will be filled with Section 8 rentals. Up until Monday night I was led to believe that these 'affordable units' were supposed to be for our young teachers, police and firefighters who couldn't ordinarily afford to live in the town in which they work and the elderly who needed to downsize to continue to live here.

What kind of a scheme have our state legislators led us into?

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week. This week, BHRC reports local representatives' roll call attendance records for the 2003 session through September 5.

The House has held 415 roll call votes. BHRC tabulates the number of roll calls on which each representative was present and voting and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total roll call votes held. That percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record.

Several quorum roll calls, used to gather a majority of members onto the House floor to conduct business, are also included in the 415 roll calls. On the quorum roll calls, members simply vote "present" in order to indicate their presence in the chamber. When a representative does not indicate his or her presence on a quorum roll call, we count that as a roll call absence just like any other roll call absence.

LOCAL REPRESENTATIVES' ATTENDANCE RECORDS

The percentage listed next to the representatives' name is the percentage of roll call votes for which he or she was present and voting. The number in parentheses represents the number of roll calls the representative missed.

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

$700 MILLION RESERVE FUND- The big news on Beacon Hill was that the state has apparently built up a reserve fund in excess of $700 million. The figure is well above the amount estimated by lawmakers and administration officials when drafting the fiscal 2004 state budget. The higher than expected figure is the result of several factors including increased tax collections, closing of some tax loopholes and an increase in some federal funds. Human service advocates are urging that some of the reserve be used to restore money that was cut from many human service programs in the state budget. Others, including House Speaker Thomas Finneran, are urging caution and note that the state still faces a huge budget deficit next year and should not rush into spending a large portion of the reserve.

INITIATIVE PETITIONS- Attorney General Tom Reilly's office announced that 11 petitions for proposed laws or constitutional amendments were certified and cleared the first hurdle for possible inclusion on future statewide ballots. Proposed laws include eliminating the motor vehicle excise tax, allowing candidates for public office to be nominated by more than one political party, eliminating tolls on the Massachusetts Turnpike west of Route 128 and on the Tobin Bridge, requiring commercial fishermen to use fishing gear that is safe for whales and abolishing the requirement that high school students pass the MCAS test in order to graduate and instead allowing local communities to set their own local graduation requirements. One of the proposed constitutional amendments would require the state to provide comprehensive and affordable health insurance to all residents. Supporters of each proposal must now gather 65,825 signatures by December 3 in order to present the proposal to the Legislature. If the Legislature does not approve the law, supporters must gather another 10,971 signatures in order to place their proposal on the 2004 ballot. The procedure for proposed constitutional amendments does not involve signature gathering. These proposals must be approved by 25 percent of the Legislature in 2004 and in 2005-2006 in order to appear on the 2006 ballot.

PROSTATE CANCER- Gov. Romney urged Bay State men to be tested for prostate cancer as he met with advocates to kick off Prostate Cancer Awareness Month. The governor noted that early detection increases chances for survival. Democratic party chairman Phil Johnston quickly issued a press release accusing the administration of hypocrisy and dishonesty and noted Romney vetoed $1 million from the recent state budget for a prostate cancer screening, education and treatment program. The House and Senate overrode the governor's veto by 153-4 and 40-0. Romney spokeswoman Shawn Feddeman retorted that Johnston is trying to politicize the issue of prostate cancer.

EXPANDED KENO HOURS- State Treasurer Timothy Cahill announced a pilot program to measure the potential for increased state revenue by extending the hours of operation of Keno by 22 hours per week. The game's hours are currently 12 noon to 11 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and 12 noon to 1 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Cahill's action would offer Keno Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 1 a.m. and Sunday from 12 noon to 1 a.m. Cahill estimates that his recent change implemented in March reducing the interval between Keno Games from five minutes to four minutes has generated an additional $8 million in revenue. Critics say that expanding Keno takes more money out of the pockets of players who cannot afford it and may also reduce revenue generated by other Lottery games.

Empire State Building and through Washington Square — all the way to Ground Zero. Somberly circling the perimeter of the fenced-off block, which is a quieter scene now than last summer when I first visited, I thought about the nearly two years that had quickly gone by since 9/11, and I bought a Gatorade, and a hot dog with onions, and six gray T-shirts emblazoned in red: FDNY.

I can't imagine what it was like to have been in the city that morning. In fact, I wasn't even in the country when it happened. When I was awoken by my roommate's phone call, informing me in those early hours that Washington and New York City had been attacked by terrorists, I was employed as an English teacher in northeast China. According to Beijing time, it was midnight when the phone call came, and early Wednesday morning, by the time our group of five foreign teachers had learned most of the devastating details.

My Uncle Tommy was in the city that morning, though, and was compelled to join the masses who fled the smoldering metropolis on foot, across The Brooklyn Bridge. Meanwhile, from the other side of the river, Michelle could only watch from the rooftop of her New Jersey apartment, as the two towers collapsed.

The events of that day rocked and reshaped both our country, and my family. As a result of that day, Paul's father John and stepmother Georgette have since relocated to Florida to get away from New York, the city that had claimed their son — the city where they had lived all their lives.

In the months after September 11, Georgette created a Web site to honor Paul, where visitors can read about his life, and share their comments. Based on some of the responses she's received, she's been further inspired to compile an art book that will showcase the work of the victims of September 11, be they businessmen, tradesmen, or firefighters like Paul, as another way to permanently commemorate some of the lives cut short that terrible day.

For the past year, Paul's mother Lorraine has been petitioning officials in Queens for another tribute to her son. And her hard work has paid off. On Saturday, Sept. 13, 35th Street in Astoria — the street where Paul grew up and played stickball as a boy — will be renamed in honor of him.

In the weeks following the tragedy, I closely followed the news and incoming emails from family and friends. In the waning days of September 2001, the search for Paul and so many others at Ground Zero came to an end, and as US troops landed in Afghanistan in October, my family attended Paul's memorial ceremony. Through lengthy emails, my father described for me the beautiful service that was held for Paul at Astoria's Evangelical Church.

Hundreds of firefighters from all over the country came to pay their respects, and outside, as snipers watched closely from the rooftops above, massive fire trucks stretched their ladders to full extension, like majestic book-ends on the street.

During the service, Paul's father and sister spoke, as did Mayor Giuliani. It was a bittersweet moment for my family, because at the time of the funeral ceremony, my sister Pamela was expecting her second son, Conner.

Today, at 16 months old, Connor is a happy toddler in sneakers and curls, laughing and bouncing and eating cucumbers. And it's hard to imagine a time he wasn't here.

Still, there are losses and questions lingering even for the youngest members of our family.

Conner will never have a chance to know Paul. His older brother Christian, a precocious 3, still asks about the planes and why the people flew into the buildings, and why Paul never came home.

Time moves on, and last month, Michelle's own baby girl, Skye Paulina, made her Manhattan debut.

When thinking of Paul during his final hours, my family takes some solace in the fact that he was able to be with both of his sons that Tuesday morning, before heading into work. As an uncle myself, I'm certain that Paul was there with Michelle on Skye's birthday, watching over her and her new daughter, with a smile.

What a difference a year makes

CHS field hockey coach has nothing but good feelings for '03 squad

By William Wassersug
CORRESPONDENT

A year ago, the Cohasset varsity field hockey team came within a game of making the MIAA tournament.

This season, coach Deb Bostwick thinks her team has the talent and experience to take that next step.

Bostwick has good reason for optimism.

For one thing, she has 12 seniors on the varsity, including six who started last season. Additionally, most of the other six seniors all saw considerable playing time.

Still, Bostwick said there will be a learning curve.

"Last year I had graduated 11 seniors," she said. "Now I have 12 seniors. Six of them started last year. The other six I'll be working into starting positions. Most of them had some very good playing time. Still, this year, even with the seniors, it will be a bit on the rebuilding side."

Bostwick hopes the rebuilding will happen quickly.

"We have good skills and good team camaraderie," she said. "They have the ability to work together on the field. They know each other, who the key players are and they know their roles."

Among the key players, Bostwick will look to senior captain Kelly Hurley.

"Kelly is going to be our starting roughback," Bostwick said. "She's an outstanding defensive player. She may be a flyer on defensive corners. Last year she was a halfback. She can run and run."

Bostwick said Hurley's best strength is her speed.

"She has a very good drive and she's developing her dodging skills," she said. "Her tackling is very good and she has the power to stop breakaways with her speed. That's a big plus. She's also a good communicator."

Up front, Bostwick will look to senior captain Danielle Pinkus and Courtney Caron.

"Danielle was a starter at midfield and forward last year," Bostwick said. "She has a very nice drive and a powerful nose for the ball. She's very smart. She'll help as a center halfback. She's the nucleus of the offense. She's also a helper in marking on the circle."

Bostwick hopes Pinkus will help with her leadership ability and intensity.

"She's not afraid to put her body on someone or stick to block a shot," she said. "She's a strong, intelligent player and she has the patience of a saint. She doesn't crack under pressure. Hopefully she'll be the captain on the offense. She'll also take offensive corners."

Caron, Bostwick said, is a serious offensive threat.

"She should put the ball in the net," Bostwick said. "She was a goal scorer last year. I'm expecting a lot from her. She has the ability to pull out a lot of goals. If she stays on track, she could be an all-star."

Senior Caitlin Condon will get the nod in net.

"This is Caitlin's second year on the varsity," Bostwick said. "It will be her first year as the sole starter as goalie. Last year she shared the goal with another senior. She's really improved. She knows the game and gives a whole-hearted effort. She's working on quicker feet now."

One thing that won't bother Condon is pressure.

"She can take the pressure," Bostwick said of Condon. "She won't back down.

She had some key games for us last year. She also has a solid defense. That should help her. The one thing she needs to work on is to be more vocal. She's working on that."

Another area Bostwick feels will be a strength is team depth.

Golf team splits to open season

The Cohasset golf team dropped to 1-1 with a 214-232 non-league loss to East Bridgewater on the road Monday. Playing at the Vikings home Ridder Country Club course, the match was scored according to the Patriot League's point system rather than match play, the system the Skippers are accustomed to using in South Shore League play.

The Cohasset team opened with a non-league win over Quincy at the Furnace Brook Golf Club, last Thursday, in match play by a score of 32-22.

Senior Mike Devine was the low scorer for the Skippers, shooting a 1-over 36 for the visitors, and junior Tim Pilczak finished with a nine-hole score of 40.

Scituate boys soccer team no match in opener for powerhouse Cohasset

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset 5, Scituate 0.

Yeah, this season opener for these neighboring town boys soccer rivals went pretty much the way most close observers expected it to.

Scituate lost six key starters to graduation from a team that won just a single game and tied five last year. Cohasset, conversely, lost only a handful of regulars and returned seven senior starters to a team that won 10 and tied five, including a victory in the state tourney.

So, it was hardly surprising to see the Cohasset boys appear as if they were in midseason form in Friday night's opener at Scituate High, while their Scituate counterparts seemed to have their hands full most of the game with simply getting the ball over the midfield stripe.

"I think this was the kind of game we needed," said Cohasset coach Rob Leary, who takes over the program this fall from Dave Nigro. "Scituate is rebuilding a little bit right now, and that gave us a chance to settle into our new game plan, and get comfortable with it. I think it helped the kids know what they can expect from me and what I

Even with heavy graduation toll, CHS gridders eye competitive '03 campaign

So, does winning really beget winning? Cohasset High football coach Tony Rolfe certainly hopes so.

"We've had two real good years in a row, and I'm hoping that winning attitude the players have developed shows up again this year," said the sixth year head coach who has directed the Skippers to a 17-3 record over the last two years. "We did lose some real good players, but I don't feel as if we have any huge holes to fill. Time will tell, though."

In all, the Skippers lost nine players to graduation, all of them starters. Now, this would be a heavy toll on any football program, but conventional thinking would indicate the impact would be particularly telling for a school like CHS, by far the smallest school in the SSL in terms of student population.

Arguably, the two most difficult players to replace will be team," she said. "We had 45 kids try out for the varsity and junior varsity," she said. "I'll carry 16 on the varsity with three more who will help the varsity and junior varsity. We'll probably have 20 or 21 on the JV."

Bostwick plans to use the numbers as an advantage.

"We'll have the ability to use all the kids," she said. "We should have some power and endurance. We plan to stretch other teams' endurance. I have kids on the bench who are about equal with the starters. Right now I'm trying to get them in shape. They're working hard. They're hungry."

Bostwick said one difference between last season and this season is in the way the team plays together.

"There's more of a team concept this year," she said. "The camaraderie is great. There are no cliques. All of them are very supportive of each other. I like that a lot. Last year we had more people playing for themselves. We don't have that this year. I enjoy this team. I look forward to practice. I can't wait for the first game.

"I have high hopes for this team. I just love the atmosphere here."

As for team camaraderie and winning, Bostwick has recent experience to draw from.

This season, she played on a women's softball team that won their league title in Braintree.

Along with the varsity, Bostwick is excited about the JV as well.

"We have a new JV coach," she said. "Alley Williams will be a great asset to the program. She's taking over for Danielle Shaughnessey who left to have a baby."

Cohasset opens the season Friday at home against Sturgis Charter (4 p.m. start).

will expect from them in games."

It took the Skippers all of 69 seconds to get on the board as sophomore Aiden Buick fed a pass through to captain Dave Santiago for the quick blast past helpless Scituate keeper Roman Grivalja.

Cohasset continued to dominate the territorial battle throughout the first half, but Scituate's backline did a nice job of limiting clean looks on Grivalja, junior sweeper Brian Zona in particular coming up big.

However, the dam could withstand the relentless pressure for only so long. In the 27th minute, Santiago returned the favor for his earlier set up, feeding Aiden Buick for a quick one-timer that made it 2-0.

The floodgates really opened from there, as Cohasset tallied twice more before the halftime break.

Senior Andrew Wise deftly took a pass out of the air from 20 yards straight out, one-timing it just inside the left post with 4:11 to go.

Senior co-captain Chris Clark then did what he does best, weaving through half of the Scituate defense on a rush that started at midfield before blasting a shot from 25 yards out to the right that got by Grivalja farside just 25 seconds before the double whistle.

The rout was on in force when, three minutes into the second half, Clark refused to give up after he was triple-teamed and stripped on another scintillating rush from the left, as he poked the ball away a Scituate defender on an attempted clear and slid it into the middle to the hard-charging Santiago, who roofed the shot over junior Colin Mason, who took over in net for Scituate in the second half and actually acquitted himself quite well.

Coach Leary began emptying his bench liberally at that point.

"Everyone got a chance to play, so that was another plus," said Leary, who left the head coaching job at Rockland High in the late 90s in order to pursue his Master's degree in Education, and has been an assistant boys soccer coach at Marshfield the last few years. "Getting varsity experience for as many guys as possible is something you like to do because you never know when injuries might hit."

The coach lauded the play in particular of senior sweeper Craig Laugelle and Wise (goal, assist).

"Craig was just awesome all game long, stepping up, not letting Scituate players get much of a look on goal," Leary said of the returning SSL all-star. "And Andrew really stepped up. I gave him my Player of the Game Award, and I let him know this is exactly what I expect from him every time out."

Senior Jesse Brewer played most of the game in net for the Skippers, and though he needed to stop only a handful of shots to record the shutout, Leary made a point of lauding the work of his keeper. The coach was particularly impressed with the way the converted midfielder came out of net aggressively to play the ball.

"Jesse looked good making the stops he had to, and he helped get our offense going too with the way he came out an played the ball with his feet at times," noted Leary. "The first few times he did that I'd say 'what the heck is he doing,' but I see he's got such a strong game with his feet. He seems to have a good sense of when to do it, so we'll keep letting him do it."

The Cohasset boys got back into action Wednesday, with Mashpee coming to town for their home and South Shore League opener. The Skippers first big test of the season is expected to come under the lights at Norwell High Saturday night (6:30 p.m. start) versus the defending SSL champion Clippers. Norwell, like Cohasset, returns most of its talent from last year's team. These two teams split last year's two meetings.

Rox Open Championship Series with 4-1 victory

Lynn, MA- One down, two to go. Mike Marchesano outdueled North Shore ace John Kelly as the Brockton Rox opened the best-of-five league championship series with a 4-1 victory at Fraser Field. Game two is scheduled for Wednesday at 7:05 p.m.

Marchesano (2-0) allowed only one run and four hits over six solid innings, striking out seven and walking just one. After allowing a first-inning RBI single to Frank Charles that put the Spirit ahead 1-0, the right-hander shut down North Shore on only two hits over the next five innings. In the playoffs, Marchesano has now pitched 14 innings total and allowed only two runs.

The Rox pounded out nine hits in four innings against Kelly (1-1), the league's winningest pitcher this season. Brockton tied the game in the second as Francisco Matos scored on a throwing error by North Shore second baseman Marcos Agramonte, then took the lead for good with two two-out runs in the fourth.

Mel Rosario led off the fourth with a double, then moved to third base with two outs on a sacrifice bunt by Nestor Smith. The next batter Abner Arroyo delivered another in a string of important hits this post-season, an RBI double that scored Rosario to put the Rox ahead 2-1. Jake Daubert followed with a single scoring Arroyo to make the score 3-1.

Brockton chased Kelly from the game before he got an out in the fifth, as Craig Lewis and Matos connected for back-to-back singles leading off the inning. The new pitcher Nate Beucler allowed an RBI ground out to the first batter he faced Saul Bustos, plating Lewis with the final run of the night.

Tony Stutz pitched two scoreless innings of relief for the Rox before giving way to Conor Brooks. Brooks allowed two baserunners in the ninth, but struck out pinch-hitter Brian Schmitt to end the game and record the save. The Brockton closer is now 1-0 with two saves in four playoff appearances.

Daubert and Matos had three hits apiece for the Rox, while Arroyo went 2-4 with a walk, an RBI and a run scored. Charles led the Spirit offense by going 3-4 with the team's lone RBI. Beucler and Chad Bircher combined to pitch five scoreless innings out of the pen, after North Shore failed to use a single relief pitcher in the team's three-game sweep of Quebec in the divisional round.

Greg Salvevold (0-1) is slated to pitch for Brockton against North Shore rookie Jeremy Sugarman (1-0) in game two as the Rox try to take a 2-0 series lead. The series then shifts to Campanelli Stadium for game three Thursday night. Single-game tickets for the game are on sale at the Rox box and via the Rox Web site, www.brockton-rox.com.

Series Notes

The best-of-five Northeast League Championship series pits Massachusetts rivals Brockton and North Shore beginning Tuesday. The first two games will be played at North Shore and the last three at Brockton. The series is being dubbed the "Big Dig Series" because of the recently completed set of roads and tunnels that is the route between the two Boston-area towns.

North Shore swept Québec, 3-to-0, behind three complete game pitching performances in the North Divisional Series. Brockton rallied from a 10-0 lambasting at the hands of New Jersey to win three close games in a row and take the South Divisional Series, 3-to-1.

Northeast League Championship Series (with probable starters and playoff statistics):

Game 2, Wednesday, Sept. 10: Brockton (LH Scott Martin 0-0, 1.23, 7.1 IP) @ North Shore (RH Jeremy Sugarman 1-0, 2.00, 9 IP), 7:00

Game 3, Thursday, Sept. 11: North Shore (RH Klae Calvert 1-0, 3.00, 9 IP) @ Brockton (RH Joey Baker 0-0, 6.23, 4.1 IP), 7:11

Game 4, Friday, Sept. 12 (if necessary): North Shore (LH Bryan Morse, DNP) @ Brockton (RH Greg Salvevold 0-1, 13.50, 3.1 IP), 7:11

Game 5, Saturday, Sept. 13 (if necessary): North Shore (RH John Kelly 1-0, 2.00, 9 IP) @ Brockton (RH Mike Marchesano 1-0, 1.13, 8 IP), 7:11.

offensive lineman/middle linebacker Cosimo Cambi, the team's leading tackler by far the past two seasons, and Tom Anderson, the team's three year starting tight end/strong safety/kicker/punter, both two-time South Shore League all-stars and 2002 Mariner All-Scholastics.

"Those will be two of the bigger holes," conceded Rolfe, a former assistant coach at Hingham High. "Cosimo just made so many plays in the middle of our defense, and Tom did so many things well for us.

"Tom's kicking and punting were huge weapons for us. It's amazing looking back on all the times our opponents started their drives inside their own 20-yard line, and that was thanks in big part to Tom's leg."

Of course, the losses to the caps and gowns of league all-stars Braun Goodson, an 1,800-yard rusher, Ben Lynner, a sensational defensive lineman, and Mike Snowdale, a two-year starter at quarterback, can't exactly be glossed over. Ditto for the graduations of starting wide-out John Durkin, defensive backs Nick Spirito and Matt Davis and linebacker Chris McKenna.

The good news for the Skippers is they return 80 percent of their starting offensive line and three starting linebackers.

"And those are two vital areas on both sides of the ball," noted Rolfe. "I'm sure there are a lot of coaches out there who wish they could start with that."

Cambi is the only subtraction on the offensive line. Back in the trenches will be senior captain Steven Davis (6-2, 250), senior Dan Tarpey (6-2, 210), junior Matt Casey (5-foot-9, 170 pounds) and sophomore Nick Arment (6-2, 250 pounds). Sophomore Dan McCarthy (6-1/220) has earned the honor of filling Cambi's huge shoes at right tackle.

"I think our offensive line is a definite strength," said coach Rolfe. "Our four returning starters are bigger and have a year's experience under their belts. (Dan) McCarthy has been a real pleasant surprise. He's really picked it up, and I'm sure he's going to do just fine."

The veteran coach also laughs at the notion that Casey, who is also a star wrestler, is undersized for line play.

"Yeah, some people might have thought that last year too, but that didn't last long once they saw what he could do," laughed Rolfe. "He's done a super job. He does everything we need him to do."

The experience factor up front should help what is a relatively inexperienced backfield settle in. Only junior fullback Ted Straughn is back to reclaim his 2002 role.

Taking over for Snowdale at quarterback will be senior captain Mike Dooley, a starter at cornerback last year. Dooley has seen plenty of reps in practice and scrimmages while backing up Snowdale the previous two seasons, and actually filled in for an injured Snowdale in his sophomore year at QB and led the Skippers to a win over Cardinal Spellman. Though undersized by most QB standards at 5-6, 160 pounds, coach Rolfe insists he has no concerns about that being a factor.

"Mike has done a superb job so far and he's an extremely worthy successor to Snowdale," said Rolfe. "He's been waiting in the wings, and now is his time. He's one of those students of the game. Football is his thing.

"Mike is tough, he can run and he has a very strong arm. I believe he's going to have an excellent year."

In fact, coach Rolfe claims this year's Skippers team may throw the ball more than any team he's ever had, which is saying something considering the Skippers have led the SSL in passing yards over the last two years.

"With the receivers we have, it only makes sense to use them," said Rolfe. "We've got to get those guys the ball."

The return to health of senior captain Chris Bilodeau, a 2001 SSL all-star who missed all of last season to injury, should provide a huge lift to the offense, one that could go a long way toward making up for the loss of 1,800-yard rusher Goodson.

"Honestly, I'm amazed by what Chris can do on the field," noted Rolfe. "He has just about the best hands I've ever seen at this level. If he can get his hands on a pass, it's a catch."

The coach was almost as effusive in his praise of junior speedster D.J. Silvia, a regular in last year's wide out rotation, and senior tight end Sean Connelly (6-4, 200 pounds), a starter at defensive end in 2002 who will look to fill the huge shoes of Anderson.

"Both of those guys, like Chris, have shown they can catch the ball that's thrown anywhere near them, and Straughn has real good hands too. I can see him catching the ball out of the backfield too."

The starting backfield is rounded out by Dwayne Morris. The senior takes over Goodson's lead runner role, and coach Rolfe has already called him "the most pleasant surprise so far this year."

"Dwayne has good vision and is faster than we thought," said Rolfe. "He's a lot like (Dooley) in that he's been waiting his chance to play behind some pretty good players. I think he's going to really open some eyes."

Long an opponent of two-way play, Rolfe concedes he may well have to adjust his thinking given the toll taken by graduation, particularly on the defensive line.

Davis, Tarpey and Armant all figure is what the coach sees as a seven-player mix up front defensively. Senior Rob Carpenter, a 2001 varsity team player who returns to CHS after a year of prep school, and junior Leo Clougherty, Kelvin Ferreira and Matt Baroudi round out this mix.

Casey and Straughn return to linebacker roles, where they will join third year starter Tony Truglia, the fourth senior captain. McCarthy may also see some duty there.

Going both ways in the defensive backfield will be Bilodeau and Connelly, both having been tabbed as starting safeties. Connelly makes a big transition from defensive line, but Rolfe figures his combination of size and speed makes him ideal for the "centerfield"/run support role.

As for Bilodeau, there was never any thought of him being a one-way player.

"Chris is my field general defensively," noted Rolfe. "We'd weaken ourselves a lot with him on the sideline."

The corner back positions will be filled by athletic juniors Joe Durkin and Crandon Leahy, with Dooley an emergency fill-in only.

"Mike's a good defensive back, but I want him on the sideline with me some of the time," he said. "There are just too many things you have to talk over with your quarterback."

The Skippers open the season with three straight non-league games. They kick things off by hosting Nantucket on Saturday afternoon(1 p.m. start) at Alumni Field. Defending Catholic Central champ Archbishop Williams comes to town next Friday night, Sept. 19 (7 p.m. start).

Following the off week, Cohasset plays its first road game at Cardinal Spellman on Saturday, Oct. 4, and then kicks off South Shore League play at home on Friday, Oct. 10, versus Carver.

"On paper, Norwell looks like the team to beat in our league right now," concluded Rolfe, "and Carver could be pretty good too. But you never know sometimes with high school sports how things might come together. We play a pretty tough non-league schedule and I hope that helps get us ready for the league season. I certainly feel we'll be competitive in our league."

1,700-yard rusher Braun Goodson will certainly be missed this season...

...but with young players such as Joe Durkin apparently ready to step up, the Cohasset High gridders may just make another run at a South Shore League title.

CHS gridders kick off season Friday night versus Nantucket

Head coach, Tony Rolfe, starts his 6th season at the helm of the Cohasset Skippers football team this Saturday, as the Nantucket Whalers visit Alumni field. Returning assistant coaches include Bob Silvia, Dave Terry, Brian Patterson, Tom Ventresca, Chris Briggs, and Donny Silvia.

The Skippers return 10 starters from last years 8-2 team, with five to seven of these starters slated to see action on both sides of the ball.

The offensive front consists of senior Dan Tarpey at left tackle, sophomore Nick Arment at left guard, junior Matt Casey at center, senior captain Steve Davis at right guard, and sophomore Dan McCarthy at right tackle. The receiving corp includes senior Sean Connolly at tight end, senior captain Chris Bilodeau and junior D J Silvia at wide-outs. Junior Ted Straughn returns at fullback, senior DeWayne Morris starts at tailback, and senior captain Mike Dooley will be calling the signals at quarterback.

Defensively, the front four will include Davis at end along with senior Robbie Carpenter, and the tackles will include junior Matt Baroudi, Tarpey, Arment, and senior Jamie Litchfield. The linebacking trio returns Casey, Straughn, and senior captain Tony Truglia. The secondary will have Bilodeau, Connolly, junior Crandon Leahy, and junior Joe Durkin.

Also seeing action for the Skippers this weekend will be junior defensive tackle/running back Kelvin Ferriera, junior defensive end Casey Coleman, junior defensive lineman/running back Joey Kehoe, junior running back Brendan Michaud, sophomore defensive back Rick Grassie, junior defensive tackle Leo Clougherty, sophomore linemen John Burgoon and John Keniley, sophomore linebackers Dave McKenna and Scott Wakefield, sophomore quarterback Chris Bryan, and sophomore defensive back Justin Wood.

The junior varsity squad will be bolstered by an incoming freshmen class that includes Anthony DiPaolo, Fletcher Smalzel, John Harrington, Blain Morin, Nick Zappolo, Jared Dick, Robert Silvia, Trip Harper, Colin Smith, Paul St Pierre, Ben Masotta, Nick Cambi, Justin Alexander, Colin Conway, Corbin Faber, and Conor Holway.

The varsity game kicks off at 1 PM, followed by the junior varsity game, which will commence shortly after the conclusion of the varsity contest. Cohasset has a three game winning streak against Nantucket, with each game usually coming down to the wire.

Cohasset High senior football players Steve Davis (55), Sean Connelly (#30), Dan Tarpey (75), Chris Bilodeau (28), Mike Dooley (24), Tomy Truglia (52), Dwayne Morris (2) and Rob Carpenter (80).

The Cohasset Mariner wants to develop a school news page to run every week. Short news items from teachers and school organizations are welcome. Photographs of events, accompanied with a short article or longer story are also sought. If you have "Stars of the Month", an interesting program or student volunteer effort, artwork, student writings, interesting field trip, or special projects, please share them with us.

Also, if you would like to request a photographer for your school event, please let us know. Contact editor Mary Ford at 781-741-2933. News items my be sent by email to mford@cnc.com or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street in the village.

Sports writer sought

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we've been lucky to have two outstanding CMHS sports reporters over the years. Jim O'Sullivan started writing for us when he was in the middle school and continued until his "retirement" when he went off to college. Jim's successor was Dave Ingber, who also did a superb job for us. Dave has now "retired" from our sports columns as he moves on to Harvard.

The time has come for us to do some recruiting for a new high school sports writer. The pay isn't as great as the intrinsic reward of knowing you've provided some scrapbook material for student athletes.

So if you can write, enjoy sports, are dependable and have access to email — please give sports editor Mike Spellman a call at 781-837-4577 or email him at mspellman@cnc.com

Service academies session tonight at Marshfield High

A Cape Cod native enrolled at the US Merchant Marine Academy will brief area high school students and their families at a forum hosted by Congressman Bill Delahunt next week to outline the Service Academy nomination process.

The session will run from 7 to 9 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 11, at Marshfield High School on 89 Forest St. in Marshfield. The event was scheduled to commemorate the second anniversary of the 9/11 terrorist attacks as part of a national call to young people to become invoked in public service.

To underscore the anniversary observance, State Patrol Officer Daniel Clark the "Singing Trooper" will perform selections from his numerous appearances with the Boston Pops. Officer Clark is renowned for his renditions of the National Anthem before public safety events and gatherings for area police and fire departments.

Admissions representatives will also be on hand from the U.S. Military Academy (West Point, NY), the U.S. Naval Academy (Annapolis, MD) and the U.S. Air Force Academy (Colorado Springs, CO). There will also be officials from the Coast Guard Academy (New London, Ct), the Merchant Marine Academy (Kings Point, NY), as well as from Norwich University (Northfield, VT) and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy in Buzzards Bay. Officials will also discuss scholarships available in the Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) program.

Tenth Congressional District residents who graduate from high school by this coming June are eligible to apply for the academic year 2004-2005. The application deadline for next year's potential nominees is Nov. 1.

Until the deadline, nomination applications are available by calling Congressman Delahunt's office toll-free at 800-794-9911. Students may also begin the application process online at www.house.gov/delahunt/svcadad.htm – a portion of the Congressman's web site which also includes internet links to each Academy's homepage.

Amanda to sign 'Millennium Girl'

Buttonwood Books & Toys welcomes Amanda C. Thompson, Sunday Sept. 21 from 2-4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset for the release of her debut novel, "Millennium Girl." Amanda of Cohasset has just turned 14, however the bigger celebration in her life is the release of her first novel, "Millennium Girl". "Millennium Girl" tells the story of Carolyn, an ordinary preteen girl who is abruptly uprooted from her life in Alaska to move to California. In this utterly unfamiliar world, Carolyn struggles through her first days at school, her first encounters with bullies, her first attempts at making friends, and her first new crush, Matt. When Matt's mother is hospitalized, Carolyn strives to help her withdrawn friend. Through this heart-rending tale, Carolyn grows and learns what it is to be a true friend.

Amanda is a freshman at Cohasset High School. She wrote this book primarily because she loves to write and had set for herself the goal of writing a novel by the time she was 13. However, she freely credits her friend Molly Gallagher for keeping her on task. Weekly she would ask Amanda what she had written and ask to see her work. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Derby celebrates science center opening

By Carl Schwaber
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Sunday, Sept. 7, parents, faculty, trustees, and donors gathered on the Derby Academy campus to mark the grand opening of the school's new science center. The six-month project was completed just in time for the start of the new school year.

The state-of-the-art facility, a renovation of the school's former library and dining room, will dramatically improve the study of the sciences at Derby with additional space, equipment, and the integration of computers.

Lisa Loring, president of the Board of Trustees, thanked individuals who gave significant amounts of time, energy, and funds toward the realization of the building project.

"With these remarkable facilities and tools for teaching science, we honor the skills of our science faculty just as we demonstrate confidence in the ability of our students to meet the academic challenges such a facility can offer," she said.

The new building features three fully-equipped laboratories, a science classroom, prep room, and a "Science Gallery," which will serve as a virtual laboratory for experimenting with and demonstrating the principles of science, especially physics. Each lab combines classroom seating with three connected lab "pods" that accommodate a total of eighteen students who can work individually or with partners.

With a snip of the scissors, Head of School Ed Foley and Derby Board President Lisa Loring of Duxbury mark the official opening of the new Derby science center.

The addition of the science center goes hand in hand with Headmaster Ed Foley's chosen school theme for this year: transitions. As he observed in his First Chapel address to the school community, "even small changes require commitment." The new science center will challenge Derby's students to excel in the pursuit and attainment of scientific knowledge.

Seniors get away from it all with walk at World's End

Club meets Fridays at Ranger Station

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Senior citizens are invited to walk World's End with the newly formed Senior Walking Club.

The informal program, sponsored by the Trustees of Reservations, "provides a venue for seniors to get together with people of similar interests," said Jim Freeborn, Supt. of the Trustees' South Shore properties. "Sometimes it's difficult to get out on one's own, and this is an opportunity to get involved in some exercise at a beautiful place with friends" and new acquaintances or to simply enjoy the fresh air.

"The walks will stretch into the fall foliage season."
— Jim Freeborn, World's End

Fitness instructor Mary Doherty, who leads a fitness group for seniors at the Hingham Senior Center, joins seniors as they take a stroll through the rolling hills and carriage roads that grace World's End, located at the end of Martin's Lane.

"That activity segued into the Walking Club," she said. "For me, it's a combination of two of my passions – fitness and conservation."

The first walk on Sept. 5 was a big success. "It was a beautiful day," said Doherty. "The fog was burning off and we saw lots of birds – osprey, egrets, and yellow finches. It's nice to get the seniors out and about to walk in such a special place."

The much-enjoyed park is a property of The Trustees of Reservations, a member-supported non-profit conservation organization working to preserve properties of exceptional historic, scenic, and ecological value in Massachusetts for public use and enjoyment.

"World's End is a great place for people of all abilities to walk because of the wide, flat, gentle grades," Freeborn said. The walks will continue through Nov. 21. There is no charge for participation, which is on a drop-in basis. No sign-ups are required. For further information, call (781) 740-7233.

People of all abilities are welcome. Walkers meet at the ranger station Fridays at 9:30 a.m. rain or shine and walk for about an hour. Participants are advised to dress appropriately for the weather and to bring water. Eastern Mountain Sports is donating water bottles in support of the effort.

World's End consists of four coastal drumlins connected by four miles of walking paths through grassy fields and groves of trees and short boardwalks through marshy sections. It has spectacular views of the Boston skyline, the Weir River, and Hingham Harbor. The property was originally laid out by the renowned landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted as a housing development but much later was saved as open space through a citizen fund-raising campaign and turned over to the Trustees of Reservations. The park's rocky shores, marshes, meadows, and granite bluffs spread along five miles of coastline. The tidal marsh was dammed by early farmers to create a hay meadow and build a causeway. It was recently restored by opening up the channel to allow free tidal flow.

"The walks will stretch into the fall foliage season," Freeborn notes. The Trustees hope to sponsor a walking program during each season, including some at other Trustees properties – Hingham's Weir River Farm, Whitney Thayer Woods in Cohasset and Hingham — with parking off Rt. 3A across from Sawyer Street in Cohasset — and the Norris Reservation on the North River in Norwell.

Ovarian cancer can strike a woman at any age.
In the early stages its symptoms are often subtle and easily confused with other ailments. Many women with ovarian cancer don't seek help until the disease has already begun to spread. If detected at its earliest stage, the five-year survival rate is over 90%.
Ovarian cancer symptoms include: bloating, a feeling of fullness in pelvic or abdominal region, gas, frequent or urgent urination, nausea, indigestion, constipation, diarrhea, menstrual disorders, pain during intercourse, fatigue, backaches. Take action if symptoms last more than 2–3 weeks.

Victorian party is grand affair for Our World Children's museum

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Estey Manning in period 1920s garb stands in front of Lions Gate for last September's garden party benefiting "Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum."

Only the finishing touches remain to turn the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum off Sohier Street from a dusty construction site into a crisp new learning space, where children can explore and be introduced to different cultures in their own backyards.

"We've accomplished a great deal," said museum trustee Mary Larson. "We're very excited about where we're at right now."

With months of planning finally coming to fruition, Larson said she can't wait for the events to begin and the programs to start.

On Sunday, Sept. 21 from 3 to 7 p.m., before its doors open, the museum will be holding what Larson described as "our big fund-raiser for the year."

Invitations are being sent out for a garden party featuring "High tea in the Victorian tradition," to be held at the Thomas and Carolyn Plant Estate, now owned by Robert and Diane Johnston who have renamed it Lion's Gate. Guests are invited to sip wine or enjoy tea and crumpets while they listen to Carnegie Hall violinist Eugenio Kaplan.

"She has been so gracious to let us do this," said Larson of Johnston, who not only opened her home to the cause this year, but at last year's similar fund-raiser as well.

"It's going to be a fun, relaxed afternoon with fun people," said Tony Bramblett, Development Coordinator for the Museum. "The property is really beautiful and unique, and there's lots of property to look around."

In addition to the beautiful landscape, guests will be able to view the work of renowned portrait artist Peter Quidley, and bid at the silent auction. Items for auction include a fully catered cocktail party for 20 in your own home by Z-Chef Catering, valued at $1600; a girl's night out makeover party at Adrian Morris Salon in Cohasset, valued at $1000; and gift certificates for many local restaurants and stores.

Bramblett said there will also be a "gentlemen's lounge" for those interested in "watching the game."

The invitation is extended to everyone in the community and tickets are $150 per person. The museum asks guests to please RSVP by Friday, Sept. 12.

Other events

While proceeds from the garden party will provide the bulk of funding for the museum, many other smaller events will be held throughout the year including a Halloween party at the museum, a Christmas sale and other events which are not yet finalized.

Out the back doors of the museum is another envisioned project on its way to becoming a reality.

"It's halfway there," Larson said.

Members of Project Playground, a sub-committee of the Our World museum, have decided to hire Environmental Concepts, a company based out of Hull, to construct the new playground to be built behind the museum. The new play structure will be made of stainless steel and will have a special coating to help protect from sea spray.

"It's the top of the line in playgrounds right now," Larson said.

Along with "Casual Friday" music nights at the Red Lion Inn, which have been a very successful fund-raiser for the playground, a fund-raiser will be held Sept. 28 in conjunction with the Carousel in Hull. The committee has been working with Nona's of Hingham and Hull to hold a month-long contest for children to create a new flavor of ice cream. The winning flavor will be showcased on the 28th with a celebration including rides and popcorn.

If all goes well, members hope the playground will be ready to open this spring.

While it won't be until next fall before permanent exhibits take their permanent space, the museum is wasting no time planning for that next big step. Members of the staff have been working with Janet Kamien, who has worked on exhibits in major museums around the country including the Children's Museum in Boston and the Children's Museum in Atlanta, to come up with appropriate exhibits for Our World.

In the meantime, many educational activities are being planned to make good use of the museum before the exhibits are in place.

Program Coordinator Michele Dupuis has been working hard on getting programs ready for opening day Wednesday, Oct. 1. She said there are three main programs being started, "With more coming in the future."

Language playgroups for children ages 3-5 will provide an introduction to early words in other languages, such as Spanish, French, or German, while socializing with other children. Movement classes for children ages 5-8 will feature forms of physical activity from other countries such as Tai Chi, Kung Fu, Karate, Irish Step Dance, and Yoga. Birthday parties featuring themes that span the globe will be conducted by a museum instructor including age-appropriate games and activities. Current themes for parties include, but are not limited to, international games and play and global celebration. Parties are geared toward children ages 4 and up.

The museum, which is located in the 1929 wing of the former Osgood School, is devoted to creating opportunities for children throughout the South Shore to gain global awareness through play spaces, rotating exhibits, and programming.

For more information on programs, events, how to volunteer, or to take a tour of the new facilities, please contact Development Coordinator, Tony Bramblett, or Program Coordinator Michele Dupuis at (781) 383-3198.

Harborview to hold raffle this weekend

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

For senior citizens living at the Harborview Apartments — monthly teas, movie nights and dinner parties are social activities they have become accustomed to. But in order to keep these active seniors busy, it takes funding, which is why tenants have come together to hold a yard sale, bake sale, and raffle, all in the same day.

Tenants' Association President Arlene Tuohey said members of the Harborview community will be setting up tables in front of their Senior Center building from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday Sept. 13. The bake sale will be held indoors, with tables and chairs set up for those who wish to sit and relax with their treats.

"It looks like it'll be nice weather," Tuohey said.

But perhaps the most exciting part of the day will be the drawing of the raffle, which will be held at 2 p.m. just after the yard sale has ended.

"We've got quite a bit for our raffle," Tuohey said, with many items offered from various business around town, including gift certificates to Atlantica, Bernard's, French Memories, Hair Affair and Hancock Paint, as well as local supermarkets.

All proceeds from the sale will go toward programs for the residents, of which there are many in the works. Because Harborview is subsidized by the Department of Housing and Community Development, the Tenants' Association receives $250 a year to cover business expenses, but funding for recreational activities needs to be raised.

One program sure to be a success is their monthly birthday tea. After a very successful tea held last September for a retiring visiting nurse, it was decided that a birthday tea would be planned for residents celebrating their birthdays each month.

In October, Tuohey said residents will have a pot-luck dinner, which is an event held four times a year. The next planned dinner will be held during the week of Halloween, and she suggested guests come in costume. However, she's not sure how many residents will actually come dressed in ghoulish garb.

Plans to start up a chapter of the Red Hat Society will hopefully begin to take shape in another month and a half, Tuohey said, which all Cohasset residents who are at least 50 years old are welcome to join.

The Society, which began in California and was inspired by a poem titled, "Warning" which begins, "When I am an old woman..." makes reference to wearing a purple dress with a red hat, and inspired the women to meet wearing just that for various social events. The trend caught on and chapters have spread all the way to the east coast. There are currently chapters in Scituate, Hull, Marshfield, Pembroke, and many other South Shore towns, which have been filled to capacity, so the ladies at Harborview decided to begin their own.

While the Society is intended for members who are 50 or older, an exception can be made for those who are under-age and would like to join. However, those who are under 50 are not entitled to wear purple and red, and must wear a lavender dress and pink hat until they have earned the right to wear the bolder colors.

Other fun activities include movie night, which is held once a month. Tuohey said Cohasset Housing Authority Director Marilyn LeBlanc's son brings down a screen and projector so residents can all feel like they're at the movies.

"We'd like to get a DVD player," she said, so residents will have access to their own machine for movie night.

Tickets for the raffle will be available at Harborview, located behind the police station on Elm Street, during the day of the sale. Representatives from Harborview will also have a table set up at the Farmer's Market on Thursday.

What's up at the raffle

Residents at Harborview will hold a yard sale from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. with a raffle drawing to be held at 2 o'clock. Tickets are $1 each or six for $5.

Items to be raffled off include:

$50 gift certificate to Atlantica
$75 gift certificate to Bernard's
$25 gift certificate to Hancock paint
$25 gift certificate from the Christopher Gallery
$100 towards any Rosano-Davis service
$25 gift certificate to French Memories
$100 toward services from Hassan signs
$25 gift certificate to Shaws
$50 gift certificate to Stop and Shop
$25 gift certificate to Good Sport
$25 gift certificate to Atlantic Bagel
$17 gift certificate to Hair Affair
Two $20 gift certificates to Aveni cleaners

Special art for special event sponsored by historical society

The "At the Edge of the Sea Art Show/Fund Raiser" celebration honoring Cohasset's maritime history, and saluting the Historical Society's 75th anniversary, the Pratt building's 100 years, and the 154th commemoration of the Brig St. John is shaping up to be an event not to be missed. An internationally recognized artist, W. K. Gilbert, whose commissioned fine art pieces hang in corporate offices, and homes in North America, South America, Scandinavia, the Orient, England, and throughout Europe, will be doing four pieces specifically for the Cohasset Historical Society's Show: among them will be the Brig St. John and another called Approaching Minots Light circa 1850.

Although Gilbert started out with an interest in playing ball, a blown knee turned him to his other love: art. However, he has managed very effectively to combine his love of sports with his love of painting: he has done work for the Boston Celtics, the Boston Red Sox, the Coast Guard Academy, the Boston Bruins, the New England Patriots, the Ferrari Club of America, Sugarloaf USA, as well as Carol Baldwin Breast Cancer Research Fund, and the Timothy Hill Children's Ranch.

Gilbert will be hanging other pieces and will be offering giclée prints at the event, all of which will benefit the Historical Society. The opening reception-dinner is on Thursday, Oct. 2

Save the dates of Oct. 2-5 for the gala event. Anyone who would like to share ideas, expertise or time, call 781-383-1168.

Police arrested 11 in August

August was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 11 arrests, two for shoplifting, two for possession of a Class D substance, two for minor in possession of liquor, one for fugitive from justice, one for outstanding warrant, and finally three for protective custody, police chief Robert Jackson said.

During the month of August the police department investigated six motor vehicle accidents, one of which resulted in personal injury. There were 78 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $1,870 in fines. Additionally, there were 258 parking tickets issued for $6,550 in fines.

Also in the month of August the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,096 calls for police services, of those 112 were Emergency 911 calls, Jackson said.

In the month of August there was one breaking and entering of a residence. Additionally there were 16 Criminal Complaints issued for the month.

In August the Cohasset Police Department successfully completed the first Student Police Academy under the direction of Sergeant William Quigley. Fourteen Cohasset High School juniors and seniors participated in this program. The subjects that were covered were police department budget; planning and organization; search and seizure; patrol procedures; criminal investigations; detective bureau; crime scenes, firearm safety; and also riding along with Cohasset police officers. The police department is looking forward to continuing the program next spring, Jackson said.

Also in August the Cohasset Police Department received a $1,000 grant from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau (GHSB) for its child protection safety (CPS) program. The funds will be used to purchase child safety seats and CPS equipment.

Since March of this year, Officer Jeffrey Treanor has conducted more than 75 child restraint installations.

ASP – the best acronym in town

Home repair effort makes a difference

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

If a parent asked their teenager to climb under their family home in Cohasset to make a few repairs, it's almost certain they would be given a funny look. Ask a teenager to do the same thing on an Appalachia Service Project, and they'll do it without question.

For the past 16 summers, Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, has been heading up the ASP trips to Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia, and Tennessee, setting up groups of high school age volunteers from Cohasset with people who cannot afford to fix their homes. Housed in local churches or schools in the town of their work site, volunteers spend a week helping out those in need.

"I guarantee parents their teens will come back different," Ritts said.

While the program is run through the Second Congregational Church, Ritts said members of any ecumenical group in the Cohasset community are welcome to participate. Perhaps that is why the town has the largest single group of participants out of the 40 states involved in the program.

"It's nice to see the churches working together," said Phil Lehr, who has participated on the trips for many years.

This past summer, around 175 total volunteers, broken into groups comprised of five teenagers and two adults, each spent a week at various sites, spread over five different communities in Virginia. When Ritts began the program in the late 1980s, there were only seven teenagers and he and his wife.

"It really grew over the years," he said.

Trips are usually taken the last week in June, just after school gets out for the summer. Ritts said the trip takes all year to prepare for, but the rewards that come from being a part of the project are well worth the effort.

Along with securing the work site, volunteers are given as much information as possible about the area they will be visiting, to get them familiar with the different way of life they will experience.

"The kids always want to know why they (the poor) can't just get a job," said David Bigley, who has been volunteering for ASP as well as Habitat for Humanity for many years. Leaders are careful to explain that there are many different circumstances that can bring a family or an individual to the point where they need the kind of help the project will bring.

ASP volunteers board the bus for the trip down south.

Volunteers take a break from their home repair project.

"There's a lot of education and psychological preparation that goes into this," Bigley said.

At workshops, role-playing activities are conducted where teenagers must make fundamental decisions while pretending to live in the area they will visit.

"If the house needs painting and you need food, what do you do? You can't choose both," Bigley said.

Because they travel to areas of poverty, there are little to no amenities on the trips.

"You may or may not have hot showers. You may or may not have showers," Bigley said. "Having a hot shower is a real treat."

Volunteers also sleep on the floor most of the time, which for many adults, can pose a challenge.

"I always bring a cot," said Lehr's father, Arthur, who at 84 years old is the oldest participant in the program. Arthur became involved in the program after his son decided to go, "So I said, what the heck, I might as well go to." (This summer would have been Arthur's 10th summer going, but he chose to stay home after undergoing quadruple bypass surgery last winter.)

Many young adults that have gone away to college often come back for the summer to participate in the program in a counselor-in-training type position.

"I think that really speaks to the value of the program," Phil Lehr said.

Experiencing life from a different point of view greatly impacts the teenagers that go on these trips. Not only that, but when they get to know the families they are helping on a more personal level, they benefit even more.

Phil Lehr told a story about a student who participated a few years ago. While he was away, he got the news that his family dog had died of old age. Having had his dog for many years, it was considered a member of the family.

"He was just so sad," Phil Lehr said.

On the work site, the boy told the family of the house he was working on what had happened, and a little boy of about five years old walked his own dog over and said, "You can have my dog."

"They're just such giving people. They don't have much, but they'll give what they have," Phil Lehr said.

But sometimes, the families are shy or have to work and volunteers don't have the opportunity to start a relationship. However, "If you're lucky enough to get to know the people, it's a very rewarding experience," Phil Lehr said.

For teenagers to participate, money has to be raised to cover transportation, materials, application fees, and room and board, which makes fund-raising a necessity.

In order to get everyone to their destination, coach buses need to be rented, which take volunteers to one central destination, then groups split off in vans from there, to go to their individual community work sites.

Pumpkin Patch

This year, the volunteers will be trying a new fund-raising idea called "The Pumpkin Patch," which will be held between the Second Congregational Church and the Town Hall.

From Oct. 11-31, "The Pumpkin Patch" will be open daily in the afternoons, every day of the week. A group that grows pumpkins specifically for fund-raising purposes will be providing the pumpkins for the cause.

Because Bigley was the Executive Director for Habitat for Humanity out of Plymouth for three years, he heard about this particular fund raiser a few years back. However, because it is a volunteer-intensive effort, he thought it would be more appropriate for the ASP group. All participants in ASP must be a part of the fund-raising process.

Overall, the year-long process is one that has proven to be a success and benefit everyone involved. There are friendships built on the trips that span across the ages by people who might never have known each other if they hadn't participated, which is the greatest reward of all.

"APS is a relational ministry that happens to do home repairs on the side," Ritts said. "We're just there to help and do what we can."

ASP is a family affair, as evidenced by the three generations of the Lehr family who are ASP regulars.

Peace and prayer service St. Stephen's

An evening Vespers Service, a half-hour of peace and prayer will be held every Sunday at 5 p.m. at Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset. The worship is open to all. There is no communion, no collection, no sermon. Instead, there is soft music and quiet prayer ranging from T.S. Eliot to Taizé to John Wesley. It is a half-hour respite between the busy weekend and the demanding schedule of the week ahead. God's voice that comes in silence keeps each one in the midst too much or too little.

Vesper is the evening star so it appropriately names the worship that takes place as the light fades and the rhythm of the day slows. The gathering dusk calls each to reflect on the gifts of the passing day. The prayer recalls: "Each thing we have received, from you it came, O God." A single candle stands on a small table in front. Its flame focuses thoughts and prayers as worshipers sit in silence, lost in care or thoughts of others, feeling grateful, embracing the peace. Vespers is mentioned in the medieval Book of Hours. In the Russian Orthodox Church, vespers is called "Prayers at Lamp Lighting Time."

All are welcome to close the day with peacefulness and prayer every Sunday at 5 p.m.

Misener in trumpet recital

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now beginning its 12th season, St. Stephen's Church is presenting trumpet player, Matthew Misener in a trumpet and organ concert on Sunday, Sept. 28 at 3 p.m. The program will contain compositions of John Stanley, Hovhannes, Haydn, and Svoboda.

Town seeks to buy 22-acre Cook estate for senior housing

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If voters at the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting give the go-ahead, the town will purchase the 22.4-acre Jane Bancroft Cook estate off Sohier Street to develop 55-plus senior housing and preserve open space.

Selectmen made the announcement Tuesday night and described it as a win-win situation for the town and its senior citizens.

"This is very exciting and perhaps an historic moment for the Town of Cohasset," said Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris.

Selectmen will schedule a public hearing on a date to be announced to explain the proposal to interested citizens. The proposed purchase has been the subject of closed-door negotiations over the summer. Governmental boards are allowed to go into executive session for matters pertaining to real estate acquisition.

The Cook estate would be combined with the adjacent 9.8-acre parcel the town owns near Stop & Shop and Red Fox Lane. The town would seek a developer to purchase the combined properties to create an 87-unit, mixed-income senior housing community.

The Cook property is valued at $4.5 million; it is not clear how much the town's acreage would add to that figure. Selectmen said the town would set a minimum price in its Request for Proposals to cover the value of the combined parcels and the buyer would be required to "more than cover all the town's costs," McMorris said.

The purchase of the Cook property, which is subject to Town Meeting authorization, would be contingent on the town being able to find an acceptable buyer for the combined property, McMorris explained. If Town Meeting approves the purchase, selectmen expect to select a developer in January and have a simultaneous closing on both transactions in the middle of 2004.

Marine charter school sails in

Members of the School Committee are worried that a proposed charter school, which would be located in town, might have serious financial impacts on the school budget.

While the exact location is still unknown, Supt. Edward Malvey has received a Charter Prospectus for the South Shore Maritime Academy Charter School, which outlines the proposal for the school, including a detailed timeline for application and review.

"This could take financial resources away from the Cohasset School District," said Malvey, noting for every student that attends, the town is required to pay between $7,000 and $8,000 in tuition, not to mention transportation costs. The town is currently paying $132,000 in tuition for Cohasset students to attend the South Shore Charter School in Hull.

In its proposal, the SSMACS states its mission as being a place to "create an alternative secondary school environment which emphasizes education

When the lighting is right and a scene captures her interest, Kimberlee Alemian can be found, paintbrush in hand, depicting the ever-changing scenery of the coastal environment.

With blues and greens of briny waters splashed across the canvas, and smooth rocks spilling over a steep ledge, her brush strokes capture the essence of a day so well, you can almost feel the cool breeze on your face as the fog rolls in.

"That's what I like to capture. Different feelings of atmosphere," she said.

Do fences make good neighbors?

Village station wants to find out

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

George Roukounakis, owner of Olympic Citgo in the village, just wants to take back what's his.

To that end, he has asked the Zoning Board of Appeals to appeal the Building Inspector's denial of a fence permit that would have allowed him to install a post and chain fence just inside his property line on James Lane.

At the center of the debate is the small roadway that goes between the Red Lion Inn and the gas station at 55 South Main St. to the town parking lot.

Roukounakis, who has owned the gas station for 22 years, and his attorney, Robert Galvin, presented the ZBA with survey plans showing the layout of James Lane and the gas station, whose property line is now indicated with a painted line on the James Lane blacktop.

According to the plans, about four feet of the paved area of James Lane along the gas station side actually belongs to Roukounakis, who has offered to lease the area to the Red Lion Inn or sell it to the town to no avail.

"He just wants to assert his property rights as would any property owner," explained Galvin, adding that while the gas station would remain, Roukounakis wants to develop the part of his property near James Lane.

But a fence installed near the property line would further restrict James Lane, which is only about 16-1/2 feet wide. The tiny, sloping roadway is getting a lot of traffic including limousines and delivery trucks

Town reports available

The Town Clerk's office has a number of town reports available from the 1990's and a few copies of the various years in the '70s and '80s. Interested parties may pick up a copy during normal office hours.

Remembering veterans

The Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee has asked that two articles be included on the fall Town Meeting warrant: one to formally name the intersection of Beechwood and South Main streets as Allen A. Buffum Square. Buffum was killed on April 9, 1942 when the merchant tanker E. Van Rensselaer was sunk by a German submarine off the coast of Brazil.

"Allen has been recognized on the Veterans Memorial at the harbor, but has never had a memorial location named in his memory like the other 21 Cohasset men who gave their lives during wars of the 20th century," said Glenn A. Pratt, veterans committee chairman.

The location was referred to by generations of Cohasset residents as "Buffum's Corner," Pratt said.

The committee is also requesting $15,000 to continue its work remembering "the heroes and families of Cohasset that know best the high price of freedom," Pratt said. Current work includes the restoration of the Norman Todd Park on Beechwood Street and the upgrade and replacements of memorial signs at Long Road, Gleason Road, Johnson Square, Buffum Corner, Jason Road and Todd Park.

Underground utility work is questioned

Town Manager Mark Haddad has asked Town Counsel for an opinion on the "somewhat arduous and expensive" requirements detailed in a letter from Massachusetts Electric about installing underground conduit for utilities in the village.

Joe Cardinal, account manager, said while MassElectric is agreeable to installing the underground distribution system without wire and transformer installation until a later date, it has concerns that need to be addressed.

The electric company said it wouldn't accept ownership of the underground system until just before wire installation. Any damage to the underground system before the installation of wires would be the responsibility of the town, Cardinal said.

"Massachusetts Electric assumes no ownership or responsibility until we have completed installation of our cable," he said. In other words, the underground system would be built but in effect abandoned until the installation of cable.

The company also requires a trench inspector on site during construction at the town's expense and needs about 23 easements. The town would be required to provide MassElectric with all property deeds from affected landowners. MassElectric would prepare the easement documentation. Associated costs relating to the easements would be billed to the town.

Payment for installation of the cable and transformers, when the town decides to complete the project, would be payable in advance, Cardinal said.

Installing the underground utility system is part of the village revitalization project.

Special Town Meeting

Selectmen officially opened the warrant for the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting on Tuesday. The warrant closes at 4:30 p.m., Sept. 30. Citizens Petition Articles must be submitted by 4:30 p.m., Sept. 23.

Red Lion owner is unhappy with police

Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, has penned a scathing letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad that includes a personal attack on one of Cohasset's police officers, Sgt. William Quigley, who is shift commander from 4 p.m.-midnight.

The letter is in response to a letter to the Red Lion written by Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris detailing a series of liquor license violations at the inn as reported by the police and informing Ordelheide of the liquor laws and conditions of the inn's license. The alleged license violations were also detailed in a story in last week's Mariner.

Ordelheide said most of the police reports dealt with guests who took a drink with them outside and did not create a disturbance. He said management has assured him that outside drinking would be curbed and the inn would hire a detail officer.

Ordelheide accused Quigley, who authored most of the police reports, of being on a "mission" and then made a series of allegations against Quigley and another unnamed officer, which Police Chief Robert Jackson described as "rumor and innuendo."

"No formal complaint has been made to me," said Jackson, who has a copy of the letter. "Nothing has been substantiated."

Ordelheide also accused Haddad of ignoring complaints about the police.

"Many times the president of Saro, Inc. (d.b.a. the Red Lion Inn), Mr. (Michael) Hayes and myself have complained about specific officers and their attitude," he wrote. "Apparently you are doing nothing about it."

He told Haddad he "must get it under control before I take legal actions."

"I am upset and so are my employees," he said.

Haddad said he can't act on hearsay and Ordelheide has not provided any proof of the allegations against police.

Avalon project goes to next phase

Hearing closes, deliberations begin

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Zoning Board of Appeals wrapped up the year-long hearing on Avalon's proposed 200-unit apartment complex Monday and will now begin deliberation on whether to issue a comprehensive permit for the project.

While controversy surrounding the development planned for the 62-acre former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor site is unlikely to subside, opponents and proponents won't have to wait very long for the ZBA decision which must be issued within 40 days, under state law.

AvalonBay, the developer, needs a comprehensive permit to put a multi-unit residential complex on land that is zoned for commercial or industrial use. Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, allows developers to skirt long zoning regulations in exchange for 25 percent affordable housing. Towns like Cohasset with little affordable housing are vulnerable to comprehensive permits.

ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick said the board would direct its 40B legal consultant, Mark Brobowski, to write two draft decisions: an outright denial and an approval with conditions. He explained the draft — which would have many iterations, he said — would be sent by email to ZBA members who would add their comments. The ZBA will deliberate as a board at 7:30 p.m., Sept. 29 at Town Hall.

The ZBA which continued the hearing for only 30 minutes Monday to allow for comments on Avalon's financial information relating to the project, accepted several packets of information into the record before Chittick wielded the figurative gavel closing the hearing that opened last September.

The hearing — which took the ZBA through concerns such as public safety, number of schoolchildren, and even the grade of the driveway — heated up in recent weeks with the Water Commission urging the ZBA deny the permit over concerns the project will pollute Lily Pond, the town's water supply.

At issue is whether the ZBA will condition the permit on whether Avalon could obtain a groundwater discharge permit from the state Department or Environmental Protection or deny the comprehensive permit outright, as the Water Commission suggests.

Also taking center stage is Avalon's "pro forma" or financial analysis which can determine whether the project could be reduced in scope and still be viable economically.

If Avalon does not get a comprehensive permit or is awarded a permit with conditions it feels are unreasonable, it can appeal to the state Housing Appeals Committee.

Five to vie for school board seat

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

At total of five residents have thrown their hats into the ring for the vacant School Committee seat.

Selectmen and the four remaining members of the School Committee will meet at 7:30 p.m., next Thursday, Sept. 25 in the selectmen's office to fill the vacancy created when Jane Pescatore stepped down in August.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the combined board would make its decision that night. A simple majority vote is needed.

The interviews would be conducted in a forum where all candidates would be present at the same time and can answer questions, McMorris said, as opposed to having them come in one at a time.

Rick Shea and Adrienne MacCarthy sent their letters of interest in over the past week. Selectmen and School Committee set a deadline of Sept. 15 for interested candidates to apply for the position.

Shea, 52 Margin St. , who served on the School Committee from April 1995-April 1998, was also president of the Cohasset Education Foundation from 1993 to 1995 and served on the Alumni Field Building Committee. He is chief financial officer of Momenta Pharmaceuticals, Inc. and has more than 20 years of financial experience.

MacCarthy of Doane Street is currently president of the PSO and has served on the School Building/Facilities Committee for seven years. She helped build the new Osgood School Playground by spearheading fundraising needed to pay for the project and organizing the volunteers to install the playground.

Shea and MacCarthy join Betsy Connolly of Lily Pond Lane, Scott O'Grady of Sohier Street and Rory Winters of Forest Avenue, who have also sent letters stating their interest in filling the School Committee vacancy.

Connolly is a former member of the School Committee and has worked in the education field for 30 years;. O'Grady is the father of three children enrolled in Cohasset schools and has taught in the Weymouth and Plymouth public schools. Winters, who is a lifelong Cohasset resident, has experience in public administration.

Pescatore stepped down to accept employment with the school department.

Whoever is chosen will serve until the April Town Election. At that time three School Committee seats will be up for grabs, two for three-year terms and one to fill the remaining year on Pescatore's term. Any of the candidates can run for any of the three positions, as can the incumbents Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo, who could seek reelection. Other interested residents can also seek election to the School Committee or other town boards. Nomination papers become available in January.

Train uncertainty keeps town projects in limbo

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An Aug. 5 letter from selectmen to Gov. Mitt Romney imploring him to made a decision as soon as possible has gone unanswered.

While the Romney administration and MBTA Board of Directors continue to work to "find a level of comfort" with outstanding Greenbush issues – the affected towns are still in limbo.

The "big decision" on whether the restoration of the 17-mile rail spur to Scituate would go ahead was expected to be announced last Wednesday following an MBTA board meeting.

But MBTA General Manager Michael Mulhern said after the 90-minute closed-door session that an answer on Greenbush was still weeks away.

The further delay gives little comfort to towns like Cohasset whose plans to revitalize its downtown area are on hold until Greenbush either gets the red or green light because mitigation money for Greenbush is tied to the project.

An Aug. 5 letter from selectmen to Gov. Mitt Romney imploring him to made a decision as soon as possible has gone unanswered.

"The Board if Selectmen is not advocating a position one way or another," Town Manager Mark Haddad wrote. "What they are concerned about is the potential impact on the Town of Cohasset."

A state economic development grant for improvement of the village, improvements to the James Brook drainage system and reconstruction of the municipal parking lot are all tied directly to restoration of Greenbush through the town's mitigation agreement.

Haddad said this week the town has not been able to do anything on those projects — whose scope might have to be scaled back if the train is nixed — while Greenbush is up in the air.

Jon Carlisle, spokesman for the state Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas, said the MBTA directors want to have "more of a level of comfort" of some of the outstanding issues before deciding on whether the $474 million train project goes ahead.

"We understand the situation towns find themselves in," Carlisle said, adding the decision would be made "as soon as possible."

He explained the MBTA directors wanted to be brought up to speed on some issues and needed clarification on others but he declined to elaborate on specifics.

Haddad said he was disappointed the governor did not respond to Cohasset's letter.

"If he had said the decision will take another month, that would have been OK," Haddad said. "But the courtesy of a response to an elected board would have been nice."

closings, the town would not spend any money to buy the Cook Estate and could stand to make a considerable sum on the sale of the town-owned 9.8-acre parcel. That money could be used for myriad purposes subject to Town Meeting approval.

The 87 units would consist of apartments and cluster houses, with a portion of the rental units being affordable for low-, moderate-, and medium-income seniors. Access to the development would be off Sohier Street, selectmen said. The town will impose design controls and buffer requirements to protect adjacent properties.

"We are pleased that we have found a way to work with the private sector to meet so many of the town's needs and to protect the Old Pasture, Evergreen and Fair Oaks neighborhoods —at no net cost to the town," McMorris said.

The town was concerned about the future development of the Cook property. By combining the properties, the town can plan and direct the density and future development to provide the greatest benefit and least impact to the town, McMorris said.

"This is very exciting and perhaps an historic moment for the Town of Cohasset."
— Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris

Estimates are the tax revenue generated by the project, which would not add children to the schools, is about $300,000-$400,000 a year, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

A three-acre parcel across Sohier Street (between the Mobil Station and Fair Oaks Lane), which is part of the Cook Estate, would be retained by the town and kept as open space.

The town's draft Affordable Housing Plan issued last spring identified the needs of the town's senior citizens, said McMorris, who thanked those involved in the proposal including the Senior Housing Committee. She also thanked the late Jane Cook, who was a benefactor to the town in her lifetime and her heirs that are continuing her legacy.

There will be two articles pertaining to the Cook Estate on the Special Town Meeting warrant, Haddad explained. The first would ask Town Meeting to purchase the Cook property and the second would ask to dispose of the Cook property and the town-owned 9.8-acre parcel.

Contingencies will be built in to the RFP so if an acceptable buyer isn't found the deal doesn't go forward, Haddad said.

Senior Housing Committee Chairman Joe Nedrow said there is no doubt Cohasset has the demographics that show a need for senior housing.

"There are many seniors looking for a place to live in town," he said, adding many have already left Cohasset because there weren't any senior housing options for them.

The town-owned 9.8-acre parcel has been eyed for senior housing for years but access was a problem. With the purchase of the Cook estate, access can be gained off Sohier Street selectmen said.

Recreation dept. to meet with Flynn

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said he will meet with Recreation Department Director Jack Worley in the next few weeks, to discuss what kind of payment system will be set up now that the schools have decided to charge for the use of school facilities. Previously, the schools have opened their doors to the recreation department free of charge, but the additional children means the schools need to be cleaned more frequently, which will cost the schools money. Committee member Pat Martin suggested Flynn have the meeting as soon as possible, to give Worley time to change his budget should it be necessary.

to the Red Lion, which are backing up into Roukounakis' property because there isn't sufficient area to turn around. The existing fence, which is about five feet inside the property line, is constantly being knocked down.

"Enough is enough," Galvin said. "People need to be fair to one another."

Building Inspector Robert Egan denied the fence permit because "its construction would lead to an unacceptable safety hazard," he said.

"The building inspector is trying to protect the rights of other parties rather than assert my client's rights," Galvin said.

Galvin said Roukounakis' land is registered and is therefore not subject to adverse possession. That ZBA raised that issue because the part of James Lane that belongs to the gas station has been used as part of the roadway for years.

"He just wants to assert his property rights as would any property owner."
— Robert W. Galvin, attorney

Roukounakis, who wasn't aware where his property line was before the survey, said his new fence would have heavy duty poles to keep the trucks out.

Fire Capt. Mark Trask cautioned the ZBA that James Lane is the only route in terms of safety and access for fire trucks to get to the Red Lion Inn.

"In any other jurisdiction, this would be classified as an alley," Trask said, suggesting it be made one-way.

The ZBA took the matter under advisement.

Board worries about budget impact of new charter school and growth of the whole student while building connections between the student and the maritime environment."

Students at the school will range in age from 10th grade to 12th grade, and the proposal expects to have 32 students in grade 10 at its projected opening in 2005.

"Why don't they start in ninth grade?" School Committee member Pat Martin asked.

Listed in the mission statement, one of the main purposes for the school is to "establish a relationship with the marine coastal community, building educational understanding through cooperative projects which provide students with opportunities to engage in service to their community."

Committee members could only speculate that the school would be located on the water, but where that location would be or how the town of Cohasset was decided on, they didn't know.

Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts said she had received a call from a member of the Framingham School Committee, as did Chairman Rick Flynn. They were warned about the proposed school and the effects it could have, as their district is currently dealing with a similar situation. Tebbetts said she was told that the town of Framingham has lost $2.7 million to the charter school in its area, and it is only the second year since the school has been in operation. Not only that, Framingham is a much larger community than Cohasset and Tebbetts worries what the implications could be for Cohasset.

"This could take financial resources away from the Cohasset School District."
— Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey

"Charter schools go on their own momentum. I think it looks like a very fine plan, but I'm not interested in what they're offering right now," she said.

The committee also noted that at no point in the proposal is the South Shore Charter School mentioned. Currently located in Hull, that school will soon move to Norwell.

In its statement of need, the proposal says the SSMACS "will meet the need for more school choice on the South Shore. Currently, students have the choice of attending their town's comprehensive high school, the region's vocational technical school, or, for those who can afford them, a small number of independent and religious based schools."

Committee members empathized with the Norwell school system, and Martin said they would be "doubly hit" with both the move of the South Shore Charter School and the proposed SSMACS, because children would be more likely to attend one or the other of the schools, if they are in closer proximity to their homes.

Martin was also concerned that children might try the school out for a year and then come back to the public school, and wonders "How do we budget for that?"

The proposal also states "students will have ample opportunities to align their educational needs with those of the surrounding community. While emphasis will be on the maritime environment for a large portion of these projects, students will be encouraged to look for ways to serve and lead in all aspects of community life."

"The Center for Student Coastal Research is already doing this," said Martin. Students participating in maritime projects through the CSCR provide many services to the town and have opened its doors with such pride, that Martin worries their efforts could be overlooked in the shadow of the new school. Not only that, but students at the CSCR are funded by grant money and pose no financial burden to the town as the school would, she said.

Flynn said having the proposal sent to the Department of Education with absolutely no notice for the School Committee was a "slap in the face."

All committee members agreed the issue needs to be addressed at the state level. Malvey had a meeting yesterday with superintendents in the immediate area and said he would bring up the issue for discussion there as well. Malvey said he will continue to report on the issue as details become available.

Representatives for the SSMACS could not be reached for comment after the Mariner went to press.

Cohasset has its eye on Isabel

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"We're ready."
— Arthur Lehr, Emergency Management Director

Mother Nature can be fickle and the projected path of a hurricane can change in an instant. On the east coast, Hurricane Isabel is causing alarm in the Carolinas, as weather experts estimate the storm will hit those states tonight. While it looks as though Cohasset won't have to bear the brunt of the hurricane, residents are advised to prepare themselves for the worst-case scenario.

Emergency Management Director Arthur Lehr said the threat of Hurricane Fabian, which never made it as far as Cohasset, resulted in a meeting with various town supervisors to discuss steps necessary to be fully prepared in the case of a hurricane.

Precautionary measures include having the middle-high school ready as an emergency evacuation shelter if needed, notifying the police and fire departments that extra help needs to be available in the case of an emergency, and working with the DPW and the Board of Health to make sure they know what their roles are in a hurricane situation.

"We're ready," Lehr said.

Fire Capt. Mark Trask said the department begins to take action in the days prior to an expected storm. All the apparatus is thoroughly checked to make sure it is in good working order, and the department gets extra fuel in case the pumps are out during the storm.

"We make sure the apparatus is at the top of its operational existence," he said in a recent interview.

Once a warning is issued for the area, emergency crews begin to assess the need for extra help. Trask said once a storm hits, extra staff is called in so that there are three or four people on each vehicle.

When a hurricane hits, "it becomes a different operation," he said. With flooding hazards and the potential for flying debris, Trask said it is extremely important that response times don't suffer.

"Depending on the intensity and what damage is expected," sometimes extra police officers are called into the station, said Police Chief Robert Jackson.

Jackson said the low level areas of town are watched carefully during the outset of a storm to make sure any areas of potential flooding are given adequate notice in case evacuation becomes necessary.

In the event Isabel's path leads her to the shores of Cohasset, Lehr said residents, who are safe from flooding, should stay at home.

"We want people to stay home. Don't be sightseers," he said.

Lehr said a few years ago during a tremendous storm, a "sightseer" in a Volkswagen heard the surf was high and drove out to see it. A wave came crashing over the sea wall and washed he and his car off the road. Help was called to the scene and the sightseer was rescued, and Lehr hopes accidents such as that will not happen again.

According to Lehr, the best place to be during a hurricane is in the basement of a house, or for those who do not have basements or have one that is flooded and inaccessible, the center of the home, away from windows is the next best alternative.

Because hurricanes bring high winds, loss of power is typical. Lehr said residents should take the time to check the batteries in flashlights and radios, and look over emergency generators to make sure they are in good working order, should their use become necessary. Having canned food available and bottled water is also recommended, as well as any items a person would need should they be stranded for a few days, such as prescription medication.

Barry Joseph, owner of Joseph's Hardware on Rte. 3A, said while "we may not see the fury of the storm," he is expecting heavy rains and winds from its aftermath, which could pose problems for residents.

"We've already been selling generators, batteries and flashlights and storm-related items," Joseph said, adding he has many items reserved in the Do It Best warehouse. His store uses the hardware wholesalers, which gives him the option of reserving stock in advance from the Do It Best retail super center. He said 1,000 six volt lantern batteries, 1,000 D-cell batteries, lanterns, flashlights, duct and masking tapes, and various other storm-related items were delivered to his store yesterday.

Tina Watson, owner of Cohasset Hardware, said sales of storm-related items at her store have not gone up but expected that to change should the storm change its course.

"Let's be optimistic," she said, of Isabel keeping her distance. "We've got our sailboat in the water."

Lehr believes Isabel would have shifted north in its course by now if it was going to hit Cohasset straight on. However, he believes even without a direct hit, Cohasset should expect to receive some residual effects and assumes "we'll get wind." Not only is it important to bring in any objects from the yard that could blow away with a strong gust, he recommends taking boats out of the water.

"Some boats could be in jeopardy," he said, adding that not only do owners have to worry about their boats becoming detached from their lines, but there is always the possibility of other boats becoming detached from theirs. A loose boat can crash into surrounding boats as they are tossed about in the waves and wind. Lehr adds that boat season is practically over, and it's better to have a boat safe on land than a potential target at sea.

Even if Isabel misses Cohasset – experts are predicting an active hurricane season. The area may have to keep its eye on future hurricanes: Juan, Kate, Larry, Mindy, Nicholas, Odette, Peter, Rose, Sam, Teresa, Victor, and Wanda.

Young school walkers are put back on the bus

Parents air their concerns

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

What began as angry parents looking for a fight ended in applause for the School Committee and its efforts to remedy the transportation situation, which began when bus routes were changed last week, turning some bus-riding students into "walkers."

At the Sept. 4 School Committee meeting, it was decided that children in grades one through three, who live on parts of Sohier Street, Ripley Road, Fairoaks Lane, and connecting neighborhood streets, would return to walker status, as they had been before Deer Hill began construction, because they live within the one-mile radius of the school.

Because buses are operating almost at capacity, and bus routes are causing children to commute for nearly an hour each way, the committee began to look for alternatives to help remedy the situation. Among discussion was the need to consolidate bus stops as well as return some students to walker status to help ease the bus loads. Kindergarten students are always picked up by the bus.

Current school policy states that any student in grades one through three, living outside a one-mile radius of the schools, will be provided transportation, and exceptions to the guidelines may be made at the discretion of the superintendent. The policy applies particularly to any student who must travel in a hazardous area to and from school, and states that those students will be transported regardless of the mileage limits listed.

Students living in the affected areas all live within the one-mile radius and are by definition walkers. Because construction made their route unsafe, they began to ride the bus, and were expected to return once construction was over.

Roughly 25 concerned parents packed the middle-high school library at this Tuesday's School Committee meeting, eager to hear a response to their concerns. Fourteen families living on Fairoaks Lane, who were affected by the change, sent a letter to Supt. Edward Malvey, asking for his urgent attention to the issue. Before the meeting, Malvey reminded the audience that there were microphones located throughout the room and while the audience is not seen on television, their comments can be picked up.

"If there's anything you want to keep to yourself or your neighbor, which is fine, just be aware that it can be picked up," he said.

"I've had a few epiphanies over the last few days," said Chairman Rick Flynn. After receiving phone calls from many concerned parents throughout the week, he said the new information that kept coming in caused more issues to unfold in light of their decision.

"We need to make a more thorough review of the policy," he said.

The letter from the families reads, "Our children have been classified as 'walkers' because our neighborhood extends only to eight-tenths of a mile from the school. However, most of the route has no sidewalks, making it a per se 'hazardous area' for our youngest students. Moreover, the route contains formidable hills that conceal oncoming traffic, an orientation that causes blinding glare from the morning winter sun, and the crossing of a speedy congested thoroughfare. The notion that children in grades 1, 2, and 3 will safely overcome the hazards on this route in unrealistic. Thus, as we interpret the published transportation policy, all our K-3 children should be classified as riders, not walkers."

"I very briefly would like to appeal to you, a blanket one-mile policy isn't the way to go. Crunching numbers isn't the way to make policy."

— Donna Pratt, 75 Ripley Road

"The last thing we want to do is have an unsafe situation," said Flynn, noting additional students on a bus could also be considered hazardous. However, he said he believes with some shifting around, "We do have the capacity."

Transportation Coordinator Peggy Litchfield agreed the children could be shifted to accommodate if necessary, and said her drivers would be prepared to return to the first week of school schedule, should that be decided.

Because parents think their children are too young to walk, they have been driving their children to school, which causes much congestion and a "log jam" situation for not only the parents, but the buses as well. This is a problem that is expected to continue, especially as the weather gets colder. Not only does that pose problems for parents who must wait in line to leave the school, it causes children to have to wait to board the bus while cars get out of the way, which means they arrive home at a later hour.

"There may have been some civil disobedience over the last few days, but no one's going to hold that against anyone," Flynn joked about the lines at school.

However, Flynn used to live in the Fairoaks neighborhood and said there were no buses when his children were in school and somehow they managed to get there each and every day. However, he said he does recognize their concerns as parents and believes a compromise can be found.

"I know you guys came here looking for a fight and we don't want any fights here," he said.

Member Pat Martin said because the committee has yet to see the numbers related to the issue, including exactly how many students are on the buses and how far children actually live from the schools, more research will have to be done before a decision can be made.

"Of course I'd like to provide the service, but safety comes first," she said.

However, Martin pointed out that the miles away from the school were measured from the old Osgood School, and not the new. "What happens when you start to measure?"

Donna Pratt, 75 Ripley Road, was very concerned that measurements from the schools dictate walker status and said, "I very briefly would like to appeal to you, a blanket one-mile policy isn't the way to go. Crunching numbers isn't the way to make policy. We need the police department to be paying attention," and thinks any decisions made should involve as many boards as possible, including law enforcement officials who can help keep the neighborhoods safe for walking.

Martin said she thinks the only logical next step would be to take a look at the data and possibly re-write the policy to make sure the safest alternative is decided upon.

"We want to do the right thing," she said, adding that the policy has not been re-written at any point in the last six years.

Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts said communication is the key to solving the problem and that "Some things could have been done a lot better," at the outset of this new school year. She said if there is a way to shift students so that buses going down a street to pick up kindergarten students could pick up other students going to the same place as they drive by, that would be ideal.

Tebbetts also recognizes how dangerous it can be for pedestrians of any age to walk safely, let alone children of such young ages.

"This age requires a lot of attention," she said. "We want to be fair."

Chris Arnold, 45 Sohier St., said may of the concerns he felt were expressed at the meeting and he felt better knowing members were parents as well. He added that he has also seen a problem with communication as the letter informing parents of the change was addressed to his five-year-old, and he was one of very few on his street that actually received it.

"I do see it as a huge safety issue. I don't think it's adequate for first and second graders — I don't think it's adequate for third and fourth graders," he said. "As a parent, I'm absolutely willing to do anything we can to help fix the issue."

But Tebbetts also said the issue of capacity will have to be addressed, and the numbers will need to be looked at to make sure safety comes first.

I think I speak for everyone when I say thank you," said Daniel Driscoll, 240 Fairoaks Lane, one of the parents who sent the neighborhood letter. To that, all the parents in the audience broke out in applause. Driscoll went on to say that not every board would take the time to address an issue such as this so quickly and he and the other parents really appreciate it.

A temporary solution was found and children on the affected streets began riding the bus yesterday, as they did at the beginning of the school year, and will continue to do so pending review of the issue and a possible change in policy. Flynn added that any member of the School Committee would be happy to speak with concerned residents and invites any comments in either writing or by phone.

Bus stop changes

In light of new developments with the transportation to and from schools, the issue how to keep time on the bus to a minimum has also come up. Not only are more children riding the bus, but it's taking longer because of the amount of stops they make.

"We have drivers that would never ask you to move your bus stop," said Litchfield, but added that bus stops are the key for all bus routes. Currently, she said some of her drivers will stop at a house, roll the length of around two buses, and stop again. If stops can be consolidated, this would shave a lot of time off the current routes, she said.

"We love coming and getting your kids, but help us," she said.

"When we start to push one hour on the bus, it's too much," said Martin, but added that any ideas need to take into consideration that the drivers need enough time to transport the children safely.

"We're trying to coordinate three schedules," she said.

Other options that have been floated include possibly changing the start time of the school day, which is an issue that will be dealt with for the new school configurations, but could be implemented sooner if found it would help.

It seemed the general consensus by the end of the night was parents would try to help form neighborhood bus stops to help get children on and off the buses in a more timely fashion, as a temporary solution.

IT'S A BOY!

I received word from a very proud and excited grandpa on the birth of his grandson last week. George and Laila Roukounakis are the proud grandparents of Nicholas Kostas Roukounakis, who was born on Monday, Sept. 8, 2003 and is the newborn son of Kostas and Jinny Roukounakis. Nicholas weighed in at 9 lbs. 7 oz. and was 20-1/2 inches long. Nicholas joins his big sister Sophia (age 1-1/2) at home and we know that he is being hugged, loved and spoiled by everyone.

Congratulations to all of you on this handsome new addition to the family.

LITTLE PRINCESS

Thank heavens for little girls is the song and phrase being used in this happy household. Laurel Ann Standish Denneen was born on July 21,2003 at 12:46 p.m.. She tipped the scales 8 pounds, 8 ounces and measured 21 inches. Her happy parents are Bruce and Jennifer Denneen of French Street, Hingham. Big sister Liliana (2-1/2) is thrilled; as are grandparents Paul and Rosemary Sullivan of Cohasset and Robert and Janet Denneen of East Bridgewater. Lily and Laurel are blessed with four great-grandparents: Peter and Shirley Curtin of Brockton as well as Tina Masciarelli and Frances Denneen of East Bridgewater. Enjoy your two beautiful little girls.

School bus coordinator Litchfield likes life behind the wheel

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"I know most of the kids on both buses by name."
— Peggy Litchfield

Pulling up at the bus stop each and every morning, students are greeted by the smiling face of Peggy Litchfield. Rain, shine, snow or sleet, this dedicated driver makes sure children get where they're going — safely.

"I love my job," Litchfield said, who has been driving buses in Cohasset for the past seven years, and serving as transportation coordinator for the past two. Because she has lived in Cohasset her whole life, she said she has a real vested interest in the transportation and children of the town.

For years, Litchfield's route was on Bus 3, but she recently changed routes and now drives in her own neighborhood on Bus 6.

"I know most of the kids on both buses by name," she said, with one student in particular standing out. Daughter Tricia is in the second grade and travels with Litchfield every day.

A typical day for Litchfield begins when she and Tricia leave the house at 6 a.m. Her son Jaime is a senior in high school and drives himself, but Tricia is still too young to stay at home in the morning, so she comes along for the ride.

Her first route begins at 6:40 a.m., and she is finished at around nine o'clock. After that, she might have meetings or various business to attend to, then kindergarten pick-up begins around 11:50 and ends around 12:30 or 1 p.m.. She will then go to the middle-high school for afternoon dismissal at 2 o'clock, and continues to drive until 4 o'clock. After that, she might have another meeting, or sometimes she'll be asked to come to a School Committee meeting later in the evening.

"It's a long day. Friday's are very welcome," she said.

But Litchfield said her job is made easier by the people she works with. Bus drivers Bonnie Palm, Dama Dow, Jim Clark, and the newest addition to the staff, Kelly Dickson have been wonderfully supportive, as well as special needs van driver Virginia Clay, and her two part-time drivers April Martin and Julie Borland, who is Litchfield's sister.

"I'd be happy if I kept them forever," she said. "They drive sick, hurt, they're so loyal. Loyalty like that you just don't find."

But above all, she said working with the drivers she has now has been a joy because they love working with children so much.

"I've known drivers that didn't love kids," she said, which makes the job much harder. When dealing with the pressures and responsibility of transporting bus loads of kids on a daily basis, the only way it works it to love the kids, Litchfield said.

"We're not just bus drivers anymore, we're counselors, friends, and disciplinarians," although she said it's a rare occasion when the children in Cohasset misbehave terribly.

"Kids will be kids, but by and large, we have a well-behaved group of kids," she said.

Mechanic Marty Hale also makes Litchfield's life a little easier through his much needed skills. He "has been instrumental in the success of our transportation system. Marty is essentially at our beckoned call and very easy to work with," she said.

Not only has her staff been supportive, but the administration at the schools have been supportive as well.

Litchfield said Business Manager, Ivan Klimko, has "been really helpful to me as a new manager," adding that he has taught her a lot and been very supportive of the transportation program.

One of the main reasons the job is a perfect fit for Litchfield is because "I love to drive - period." Because she is a single mom, her job enables her to spend time with her kids because they have the same schedule, including the same vacation days.

Originally, Litchfield began her driving career behind the wheel of a special needs van. After much prodding from a family friend to take on the larger vehicles, she said she absolutely loved it and didn't look back.

"Now as a coordinator, the job is everything I had hoped it would be," Litchfield said, and hopes to continue on in her role for years to come. "If the town will have me, I'll do it until I retire."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Betting on the Greenbush alternative

Town and state officials, and some of our readers, have been known to joke with us that if the Greenbush project is nixed, we won't have anything to write about.

Of course that is a gross exaggeration because the paper is full of other news. However, we do agree our Greenbush stories must be numbering in the hundreds and our train editorials are in the dozens over the past decade.

It's become one of those stories that we can almost write without looking at our notebook because we are so familiar with all the issues.

So if nothing less, we'd feel a few pangs of nostalgia from the story standpoint of we didn't have Greenbush to write about.

Yet, despite the passing of "D" day — Sept. 10 — when the Greenbush go or no-go decision was slated to be announced and wasn't, we're still bullish on the train.

Design work on the 17-mile rail spur to Scituate has continued despite the construction moratorium put in place last February. The right-of-way issue with CSX Corporation in Braintree has been resolved, which was a major sticking point.

Yet we're told the Greenbush decision is still two to three weeks away because of a need for a more of a "comfort level" on Greenbush issues among the MBTA's Board of Directors that wants more information on alternatives.

We have to wonder if any members of the MBTA board have been subjected to the "comfort level" (a.k.a. gridlock) along Route 3 and the Southeast Expressway that spreads way beyond the morning and evening rush hours. The traffic and congestion along Route 3 and those roads feeding into the major highway only seem to be getting worse while we sit and wait for a Greenbush decision.

Last Friday, for example, Route 3 from Hingham on was a parking lot. There was absolutely no movement along the roadway and the congestion never seemed to dissipate. Any South Shore commuter can share with MBTA board members countless stories similar to what happened Friday. It's become a regular occurrence.

A Greenbush decision seems to be moving as slowly as the morning commute. And for those who find the commuter boat inconvenient, the Expressway is their only alternative to get to work in the city.

While we respect some of the thoughtful arguments raised by opponents with environmental concerns, we're not convinced a combination of boats and buses would attract commuters in droves and get cars off the highway.

We also think the debate on "alternatives" — which has been floated since Day One — has run its course. The resounding success of the Plymouth and Middleboro lines should be the convincing argument that the train —"out-dated mode of transport," as opponents readily point out — still has a lot of life

In fact, in most civilized places on this planet, train travel is alive and well and moving people efficiently.

Yes, the $474 million Greenbush project is expensive and is getting more so, in large part, due to all the delays.

So it's time for the MBTA, Gov. Romney and Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas to lift the construction moratorium. They need to sound the whistle for Greenbush and let South Shore transportation-starved citizens get on board.

Returning to old neighborhoods

TO THE EDITOR:

The Sept. 11 TV Chronicle program dealt with the architectural concept of rather densely packed housing units accompanied by a tract of common land, as an alternative to the current fashion of widely diffused single-family houses on very large lots. The concept hasn't found much favor in New England, in part because of our dislike of change, and in part because the existing citizenry fear the many newcomers would overload schools and town services and increase taxes, and their town officials reflect those fears.

But does this concept represent change, or is it a return to the good old days? The time when one could walk to the train station, to stores, to church or to your neighbors! Unlike now, when kids have to be ferried to school, to activities, to visit friends, when every household needs at least two vehicles.

Once upon a time, we could easily get together enough kids from nearby homes to play baseball in a nearby field. That doesn't happen now, with kids isolated from neighbors by an acre or so. Note that houses near our village are at a premium; the new owners sacrifice some of the already small lots to expand the living space.

Granted, the large high-density housing units being discussed for Cohasset don't provide easy access to anything except each other, although conceivably stores, churches and community centers might follow as part of future development.

So what's the future? More sprawl, from suburbia to exurbia and more isolation on large lots with shopping in distant megamalls, or a partial return to neighborhoods clustered around their stores and public buildings?

Balancing diet and the budget

TO THE EDITOR:

I was quite honored to be invited to join the Nutrition Advisory Committee in Cohasset to help improve the nutritional status and health of Cohasset schoolchildren. I look forward to working with the Board of Health, School Committee, parents and kids.

As many of you know, obesity rates are skyrocketing in the US – 64.5 percent of Americans are either overweight or obese – and along with this comes massive increases in the incidence of Type II diabetes, heart disease, and cancer. Most disturbingly, the increase in overweight children in the U.S. is twice that of adults! Obesity is also becoming an international problem as people around the world become more sedentary and adopt the "American" style of eating. Over consumption has now replaced malnutrition as the world's top food problem.

Children in Cohasset are not immune to this disturbing trend. In fact, today's young people are much more at risk than we were as kids. High fat, high carbohydrate foods are everywhere and in giant portions that didn't exist a few years ago. Consider this: fast food and other junk food is now served at restaurants and drive-thrus, on interstate highways, at stadiums, airports, zoos, universities, cruise ships, trains, airplanes, K-Marts, Wal-marts, gas stations, drug stores, shopping malls, even hospitals. Within a few miles, Cohasset alone has more than 20 places to get food! Food today is available around the clock, is relatively cheap, and is promoted heavily to children. Do our schools have to join the bandwagon? Can't our kids be free (or mostly free) of high fat, high sugar food just until 2-3 p.m.? We as parents have a tough enough time trying to compete with supermarkets full of junk food, highways packed with fast food restaurants, and food advertisements everywhere tempting our kids. Schools are places that prepare our kids for the future and we should ensure that these environments and programs strive to reinforce healthful eating.

I applaud the great strides that the Cohasset schools have already made to improve the food and beverage choices offered to our kids. However, we all know that if fries, burgers, and pizza are featured and available every day too many of our kids will choose them too often. I am confident that with all of the talented people we have on our School Committee and Board of Health, and the bright students and faculty we have in one of the best schools in the state, we can work together to continue improving the diets and health of our kids. If we all wrap our brains around this challenge, I for one believe that budgets and diets can be balanced. Let's make it happen.

'Rails with Trails' proposals are on the table

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Monday night, the Board of Health reviewed proposals to prepare a feasibility study for a multi-use trail along the MBTA right of way from Hingham to Scituate. The project was initiated to attempt to ensure a continued ability for the town to use the popular right of way for walking, access, and recreation whether or not the MBTA completes the Greenbush project. The trail would operate under state "greenspace" regulations, and would provide a safe , pleasant method of access, linking many of the major public facilities with one another, such as the ball fields, the swimming center, the MBTA station, library, and down town shops and public buildings, Thayer and Whitney Woods and Wompatuck State Park. This project would to be built using federal funding already earmarked for the purpose. In order to secure the federal grant, Cohasset needs to do a feasibility study to be paid for by Community Preservation Act funding.

In all, eight proposals were received. The board has chosen a short list of the three best proposals. We have also asked engineers and nationally recognized walking advocate Mark Fenton to review the proposals and advise us on technical aspects of content. Since the trail will be crossing many streets in town and pass through wetlands and the study will identify the special safety, design and construction standards required by the MBTA that will be incorporated into the project. In addition, the contractor will be required to hold several public meetings where plans will be discussed and concerns exposed.

The next step will be to meet with the three finalists selected by the board and ask for a presentation of their plans. Of particular interest will be their response to two questions: "Have you been a party to successful negotiations with the MBTA to develop a rail/trail on a right of way?" and "What is your estimate of the probability of success of your proposal in developing a rail trail along the Greenbush right of way?"

It's no secret the MBTA is reluctant to make any modifications to its planned development of the Greenbush line. And yet, rail trails have been developed on MBTA rights of way, and the MBTA has its own bike path program, aimed at converting abandoned rights of way to public use. Negotiations with the MBTA are key to successful completion of this project. Studies of rails with trails projects in other states has shown benefits to both parties; the towns and the local transportation facilities. The use of pedestrian and bike paths has reduced vehicle traffic, and provided safe convenient ways for commuters to get to their jobs.

As work on this project continues we will keep you informed of it's progress.

Deer Hill students recall Sept. 11 in thoughtful verse

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

For Deer Hill students — fifth-grader, McCauley Braun, and sixth-graders, Melissa Campedelli, Betsy Crawford, and Abby Perkinson — memories of Sept. 11, 2001 have served as inspiration for writing thoughtful poems.

In a school-wide effort, students were asked to write a poem about Sept.11 and those, who were chosen, would read their poems over the loud speaker for the entire school on the two year anniversary of the attacks. After much deliberation, Principal Keith Gauley picked the four girls for their outstanding work.

All four girls remember being in school when the tragedy occurred. They knew something was wrong, but didn't know what, as the schools decided not to tell students to allow parents the first opportunity to break the news.

"We really didn't know what was going on," recalls Abby, adding that students were given a notice to take home that they weren't allowed to read.

"On 9/11 this sacred day, people gave their lives away. To keep others standing tall, these heroes are the best of all."

— Melissa Campedelli, sixth-grader

Abby Perkinson, Melissa Campedelli, Betsy Crawford, and McCauley Braun shared their 9-11 poems with their fellow students at Deer Hill School.

Abby said she remembers getting off the bus at her grandmother's house, and her parents were already there waiting for her. Her grandmother was crying, and Abby said she thought someone in her family had died. Abby's mother had been evacuated from her job in Boston and had plans to go to New York that same day. She quickly changed her plans and stayed home.

"I just can't believe the planes took off here. To think it would happen at our airport, that's just scary," Abby said.

Betsy remembers coming home to her mother and older sister, who were waiting outside for her. She gave her mother the letter from the school and she sat Betsy down and explained what had happened.

"My mom wouldn't let me watch the news," said Betsy, who added she had to avert her eyes from the television screen when she went to the Strawberry Parfait as a special treat that afternoon.

McCauley said she remembers her mother talking about a friend from high school that was a flight attendant on one of the planes that crashed into the towers. She said she couldn't imagine if one of her parents had been killed in the tragedy.

"If I lost my mom or dad, I would be very, very sad," she said.

Melissa also said she "would have been really sad," had any of her family or friends been hurt.

But from all those memories of a day filled with tragedy, came four beautiful poems, which earned the girls some time in the spotlight. Melissa said she was very nervous having to read her poem for the school, but somehow managed to get the words out.

"On 9/11 this sacred day, people gave their lives away. To keep others standing tall, these heroes are the best of all," she wrote.

For Abby, deciding whose perspective to write from was the most challenging aspect of writing her poem. She had decided to write her poem from someone's point of view, but could not decide on who it should be. After much careful thought, she decided to write from the perspective of one of the towers. She used her imagination to think about what it would have felt like to be hit from the side, completely out of the blue and watch as her "twin sister" crumbled to the ground.

"One September morn in New York, I awoke next to my sister…A bird was coming right for her. It was a plane filled with sad faces on phones. Some were praying," she wrote.

Abby said she remembers hearing that people were calling their loved ones from cell phones and sending e-mails from laptops, not only on the planes, but on the ground after the tragedy, to let their families know where they were and that they were safe.

McCauley said she "stayed up all night," writing her poem, which begins each stanza with "Value each and every day you have when the sky is blue."

"I thought it was a cool idea," she said.

The poem continues on, "Today, you look back and think about all the young boys that sacrificed their life, just for you! That is why on September 11th, we value the soldiers, the American flag, and everybody else who helped America be brave."

Betsy said her poem came easily for her, and expresses her feelings toward the events, including what that day made her feel after she heard the news. "When I found out what happened, I thought if that kind of thing can happen, nothing that happens to me is really that bad," she said.

In her poem Betsy's words echo the feelings of the other three girls, as well as millions of people everywhere, whose lives were changed in an instant on that day two years ago.

"From that day on I realized that life may not be fair, but I think of all the others as I take each breath of air…I don't know why things happen, things happen every day, but I know I won't ever look at life in the same way."

September 11th

Once upon a lifetime
Life was always fair
Everybody Loved
And everybody shared

That lifetime never happened
It never will be true
Today is the reunion
Of the life I never knew

I thought that life was perfect
Sometime in my past
I thought that all the good times
Were definite to last

Then when I had found out
What happened earlier that day
I thought of all the people
Whose lives were taken away

From that day on I realized
That life may not be fair
But I think of all the others
As I take each breath of air

I think of all the soldiers
Who have risked their lives
I think of everyone,
Everybody who dies

I don't know why things happen
Things happen everyday
But I know I won't ever look
At life in the same way

Betsy Crawford

One September morn in New York

I awoke next to my sister
A beautiful day it was
A bird was coming right for her
It was a plane filled with sad faces on phones.
Some were praying
Two angry faces in the front
My sister's people had no warning of death
The plane crashed in her side
She was smoking at the top as people perished
My dear twin sister gone beside my place
People stared at her as she crumbled
I saw another plane coming for me
People ran for doors and windows
I would soon reunite with my sister
It would be a great loss for New York that morn
The morn of September 11, 2001.

Blue skies

Value each and every day you have when the sky is blue.

Because someplace, somewhere, somebody is having even more problems than you.

Because of religions, hopes and beliefs they don't have as much freedom as you and me.

Value each and every day you have when the sky is blue.

On September 11th the Golden Rule was disobeyed.

Every part of mankind was betrayed.

It was all one big shock, it all happened so fast it couldn't be stopped.

Value each and every day you have when the sky is blue.

Today you look back and think about all the young boys that sacrificed their life, just for you! That is why on September 11th we value the soldiers, the American flag and everybody else who helped America be brave.

Just think about all those innocent people that died on the planes and in the Twin Towers. We should cherish their lives.

Value each and every day you have, even when it's raining too.

Because someplace, somewhere on the other side, somebody's sky isn't as blue as yours.

McCauley Braun

9/11

On 9/11,
This sacred day,
People gave their lives away,
To keep others standing tall,
These heroes,
Are the Best of All.

Dead crow tests positive for West Nile Virus

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health (MDPH) has announced the identification of the first West Nile virus (WNV) positive bird of 2003 in Cohasset. Confirmatory laboratory tests were completed at the State Laboratory Institute on Sept. 16. of one birds submitted from Cohasset were positive for WNV in 2002.

While WNV can infect people of all ages, people over the age of 50 are at higher risk for severe infection. There is currently no evidence to suggest that touching a dead bird can transmit WNV directly to humans. WNV is most commonly transmitted to humans by the bite of a mosquito infected with the virus. The public should take action now to avoid mosquito bites and reduce mosquito populations around their home and neighborhoods.

Limit your time outdoors during peak periods of mosquito activity (dusk and dawn) or if you must remain outdoors, wear a long-sleeved shirt and long pants.

Use a mosquito repellent that contains DEET (the chemical N-N-diethyl-meta-toluamide) and follow the directions on the label. Never use DEET on infants. Avoid using repellents with DEET concentrations above 10-15 percent for children and with concentrations above 30-35 percent for adults. Higher concentrations of DEET may provide protection for a longer period of time, but do not provide a higher level of protection. If you are concerned about exposures to chemicals, use the lowest concentration of DEET which provides protection for the length of time you will be exposed to mosquitoes, and wash your skin when you return indoors.

MDPH encourages all residents to continue to report dead birds through its public health information line at 1-866-MASS-WNV (1-866-627-7968).

Information about WNV and reports of WNV activity in Massachusetts during 2003 can be found on the MDPH website at www.state.ma.us/dph/wnv.

One Source cleaning is off to good start

Supt. Edward Malvey said he is very happy with the results of the One Source company hired to take over the cleaning duties at all three schools. He said the results at Deer Hill have been "very impressive" while the middle-high school has been somewhat of a challenge because of the construction. A communication log has been started to keep contact flowing between the administration and on-site managers.

"I've had a senior level manager out here on a couple of occasions," said Malvey, adding that the staff has been very attentive to the minor issues that have surfaced so far. He believes with the construction coming to an end, that the middle-high school will soon be at the same standard as the other schools.

The wedding that wasn't

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

"With the ceremony planned
"I had bought the wedding band
"And invited all the neighbors from the farms.
"But the day we was to wed
"I was tired and stayed in bed.
"Now the whole durn countryside is up in arms."

Does that little ditty that we sang when we were young (and ice covered most of the earth) apply to anyone we know today?

Just think, if it hadn't been for the second anniversary of 9/11 last week and if there hadn't been a war going on in Afghanistan or Iraq or wherever, the not-yet-marital travails of Ben and J Lo might have landed on page one of the Boston Globe or even the Wall Street Journal.

In case you've been away in the Outback on one of CBS's reality survival shows, Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck —or "Bennifer," as they are known collectively by the supermarket press — were supposed to have been married Sunday at 3 p.m. (Pacific Time) in Our Lady of Mount Carmel Church in Montecito, Calif.

The reception was scheduled for a $29 million estate called Sotto Il Monte, spruced up with a transparent dance floor over the swimming pool and guarded by a private army to keep out the world's paparazzi, including the group that was reported to have offered $6 million for exclusive rights to the wedding photos. They were turned down.

When I got married, we actually had to pay the photographer — a financially strapped Hungarian refugee — to take the pictures.

Instead of the church, Ben was in Las Vegas with his friends (male), chasing the galloping dominoes, drawing to inside straights and taking in the Oscar de la Hoya-Shane Mosley welterweight boxing bout. (Won by Mosley, incidentally, and, of course, de la Hoya is taking it to court.)

And Ben's erstwhile bride-to-be was holed up with two friends (female) in a $9.5 million mansion in Miami, presumably writing excuses and apologies to the 400 guests who were invited to the wedding, including Bruce Willis and Jack Nicholson, who are famous for being movie stars, and Britney Spears, who is famous for being famous.

What happened? Did J Lo dump Ben over that alleged sexual swing he made through Vancouver earlier in the year? Or did Ben dump J Lo when they showed him that pre-nup he was to sign giving her half his fortune in the event of a split? Or did they simply get tired of each other. After all, they'd been going steady for weeks.

Why do they feel it necessary to get married at all? As far as I can see, the happiest family in Hollywood is made up of Susan Sarandon and Tim Robbins and their children, who I'm told cross the street when they go past a church just in case the "I do's" are catching.

Joyce Jillson, a astrologer hired by the Herald's Inside Track to satisfy curious minds, noted that J Lo has been married twice already and is or isn't going for a third.

"Her Jupiter is very, very controlling," she said. "His is exactly the opposite. Three is nothing. She is in midstream as far as the marriage thing is concerned.

I could have told her that without consulting Jupiter.

Supports 15-min. Village parking

TO THE EDITOR:

In the Sept. 11, 2003 "Cohasset Mariner" there was a Letter to the Editor from Peter Wood. This letter answered a Sept. 4 Mariner news brief about a letter sent to Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide, who forwarded the letter to Selectmen. In the letter to Ordelheide, the patron moaned about getting a ticket because of being parked in a 15-minute parking space while having dinner at The Red Lion Inn.

The 15-minute parking spaces are for short use while visiting businesses in downtown Cohasset. These spaces are not for the use of dinner patrons.

I applaud Cohasset police for ticketing cars over staying the 15-minute limit. The police were not on a "rampage" as Judith Cellucci states in her letter to the Red Lion Inn. They were merely enforcing the 15-minute limit by ticketing those who overstayed the 15-minute parking limit on several spaces. Hopefully, those tickets will enlighten the abusers.

I fully agree with Peter Wood on this matter.

Stamp out this nonsense

TO THE EDITOR:

The following information has been brought to my attention and I thought your readers would like to be informed.

The next time a liberal forbids display of the Ten Commandments on public property, please ask him to take the same stand on the separation of mosque and state. He can do this by ordering the U.S. Postal Service to stop selling its current issue of Arabic-lettered commemorative stamps that promote the Muslim religion.

Feverish Islamic extremists in the name of their religion's God, daily murder in cold blood American peacekeepers in Iraq and Afghanistan. These same religious zealots previously bombed Pan Am Flight 103 out of the sky, reduced our World Trade Center to rubble, obliterated U.S. military barracks in Lebanon and Saudi Arabia, smashed two of our African embassies, ripped apart the USS Cole and dozens of sailors' lives, destroyed a huge section of the Pentagon, killed airline passengers in an attempt to wipe out the White House or U.S. Capitol and sent our economy into a tailspin that has thrown millions of Americans out of work and broken up many of our families.

Let your voices be heard by alerting your congressmen. Enough is enough.

Urges ZBA to deny Avalon

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to urge the Zoning Board of Appeals to act on behalf of the overwhelming majority of the residents of this town, and to consider the overwhelming evidence presented by various consultants, boards, committees and public officials of this town, and deny or at the very least limit the size of the Avalon Bay apartment complex.

The Avalon Bay hearing is now closed, and the Zoning Board has 40 days to make a decision to either deny or accept Avalon Bay's application for a comprehensive permit. Therefore, I also strongly urge you, the residents of this wonderful town, to make your views known to the Zoning Board. I haven't talked to one single person who is in favor of the project. Aside from the fact that this mega-complex will forever change the very character of Cohasset, which is, in my opinion, a compelling enough reason to deny it, there are numerous other reasons for the Zoning Board to put this project to rest.

- The selectmen of Cohasset are not satisfied with the information that has thus far been presented, and have, in the absence of this information, supported denial of this project. (I guess I'm not the only one concerned about the drinking water.)
- The police and fire departments have voiced their concerns about safety and health issues and are, therefore, in support of denying this project.
- The Planning Board has voiced its wish to deny this project.
- The Board of Health has voiced its concerns and support denial. (Again, the drinking water)
- The Trustees of Reservation are in support of denial of this project.
- The School Committee also has concerns about the project, which, from what I understand, have still not been addressed. (The School Committee should be concerned. The reason my husband and I moved our family here from Norwell is because the town was undergoing such rapid population growth due to development, that the school system couldn't support it. When we left, there were 30 kids in the first grade classrooms! How many overrides can one town support?)
- We, the residents of Cohasset, have passed two articles overwhelmingly at Town Meeting strongly opposing this development.
- Finally, and most compelling, is that the Water Commission is opposed to this project. It seems it does not think the on-site treatment system on this former hazardous waste site is adequate. (Is this scary or what? We are talking about Lily Pond, everyone. Your and your children's drinking water supply)

This development is detrimental to the town in every way imaginable, and I believe the only reason the Zoning Board is even considering it is because they mistakenly, due to some bad counsel, believe it will in some small way address Cohasset's need for affordable housing. Cohasset does indeed need more senior and affordable housing, and I support appropriate housing solutions, but Avalon Bay is not the answer to 40B. What this is, quite simply, is a way for Avalon Bay to use 40B to build a large apartment complex. Again, I urge you, if you are not in favor of Avalon Bay, to please make your views known to the Zoning Board of Appeals. Hopefully, they will listen to the majority, weigh the evidence, and do the right thing. There isn't much time left.

Quality of life is train issue

In a recent letter to the editor of a local daily newspaper, Cohasset residents Whipple, Evans, and Logan, accused those who oppose the costly and invasive Greenbush rail project as being "obstructionists". I take issue with their use of that word when referring to those who oppose the costly and invasive Greenbush rail project.

However, if "obstructionists" is defined as those who would fight to save their towns, their homes, and the lives of their families, then so be it.

We all care about quality of life, as the above-mentioned Cohasset ladies would most certainly concur, but to deny that same quality of life to families directly affected by air-particulate polluting diesel locomotives only a few feet from their homes, instead of the less costly and less dangerous alternatives as presented by Advocates for Transportation Alternatives, is unconscionable.

Applications for Cohasset cultural grants are due by Oct. 15

The Cohasset Cultural Council has announced an Oct. 15 deadline for organizations and individuals to apply for grants to support cultural activities in the community. Cohasset Cultural Council has received $2000 from the Massachusetts Cultural Council (MCC), a state agency, for programs taking place Fall 2003-Summer 2004. In addition, the Cohasset Cultural Council will augment the grant pool with up to $4000 from unencumbered funds from past years.

Grant money can be used to support a variety of artistic and cultural programs that benefit citizens in Cohasset – including exhibits, festivals, short-term artist residencies or performances in schools, as well as cultural workshops and lectures.

The Cohasset Cultural Council also will entertain funding proposals from schools and youth groups through the PASS Program, a ticket subsidy program for school-age children that allows them to attend a Massachusetts-based cultural event.

Application forms and additional information about the Local Cultural Council Program are available on the MCC website at mass-culture.org. Contact Diane Kennedy, chairwoman, Cohasset Cultural Council at 781-383-1304 for more information.

The Local Cultural Council Program, of which Cohasset Cultural Council is a part, comprises a network of 335 councils across the state. It is the second largest program of the Massachusetts Cultural Council. MCC provides allocations to each LCC annually to support cultural activities in every city and town in Massachusetts. This is the largest program of its kind in the United States.

$501,085 FOR MENTAL HEALTH LEGAL ADVISORS (H 4004)

House 136-19, Senate 36-4, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $501,085 in funding for the Mental Health Legal Advisors Committee (MHLAC). The MHLAC, comprised of judges and lawyers well-versed and experienced in mental health law, was established as an arm of the state's court system in 1973 to protect the legal rights of mentally disabled persons. Override supporters said the MHLAC has its own small staff of lawyers but also guides private attorneys who represent some of the most vulnerable members of society involved in the state's complicated mental health system. They noted that without the MHLAC, thousands of disabled persons would not receive legal advice about a wide range of situations including their rights about commitment to and discharge from mental health facilities, the right to refuse treatment and the rights of mentally ill parents to have custody and/or contact with their children. Override opponents said it is an unpleasant necessity to reduce funding for worthwhile programs but argued that the state cannot afford the $501,085 during this fiscal crisis. They said that continued overrides of the governor's vetoes would result in an unbalanced budget, cuts to other important programs and/or tax hikes. (A "Yea" vote is for the $501,085. A "Nay" vote is against the $501,085).

$697,132 FOR EARLY INTERVENTION PROGRAM (H 4004)

House 137-18, Senate 35-5, overrode Gov. Romney's $697,132 veto reduction (from $29,188,130 to $28,490,998) for the early intervention program. The early intervention program provides early intervention for families of children up to three years of age who have developmental difficulties due to identified disabilities, or if development is at risk due to birth or environmental circumstances. Override supporters said the reduced funding would hurt this vital program that assists these children at an early age and helps them grow and develop the skills to increase their development and be healthy and happy. They noted the program serves the child and family in their natural environments, including family homes, child care centers, community play groups and libraries, in order to improve development by encouraging the child's participation in everyday activities and mixing with his or her peers. Some override opponents said $28,490,998 is projected to be sufficient to fund these early intervention programs. Others said no one likes to cut good programs but argued this is one of those necessary cuts that must be implemented in order to balance the budget, prevent deeper cuts in other worthwhile programs and avoid new taxes. (A "Yea" vote is for the $697,132. A "Nay" vote is against the $697,132).

$590,000 FOR COUNCILS ON AGING (H 4004)

House 151-0, Senate 39-1, overrode Gov. Romney's $590,000 veto reduction (from $5.9 million to $5.31 million) in funding for grants to local councils on aging. Override supporters said the state's local councils on aging serve hundreds of thousands of senior citizens and noted these grants are important to the councils' operations. They argued that many local communities are cutting funding to their councils and said that this $590,000 cut in state funding would make things even worse. Some override opponents said $5.31 million is projected to be sufficient to fund these grants. Others said unpleasant budget cuts are necessary in order to balance the budget, prevent deeper cuts in other worthy programs and avoid tax hikes. (A "Yea" vote is for the $590,000. A "Nay" vote is against the $590,000).

Another thriller

Norwell boys edge arch-rival Cohasset, 3-2

By Max Schenkein
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset first year head boys soccer coach Rob Leary had never experienced the "typical Norwell-Cohasset night game" before. Saturday night gave him a good idea of what he can expect every time these two teams meet.

The Norwell boys prevailed in a thriller over the South Shore League rival Skippers, 3-2.

"I really enjoyed this game," exclaimed Norwell coach Matt Henry, temporarily filling in for head coach Jack Browne. "We knew (Cohasset) was a tough opponent, but we kept our patience and outlasted them."

The win improved the Clippers to 3-1 on the season and 3-0 in South Shore League play. The loss was the first of the season for Cohasset (2-1). Both coaches are looking forward to the team's next meeting on Sept. 25 at Cohasset.

From the beginning, Norwell dominated field position and had the better scoring opportunities. The Clippers had chances to take the lead, but shots by seniors James Finkenstadt and Robbie Beach were turned away on outstanding saves by Cohasset senior keeper Jessie Brewer. The latter of the two saves was an outstanding stab of a direct kick, which was deflected towards the net by a Cohasset defender.

Norwell finally broke through in the 27th minute, however, when Sophomore Andrew Olsen's corner was headed into the box by Jason Kulik, and finished by Beach to give Norwell the 1-0 lead.

The visiting Skippers did not take long to respond. A minute later, two of Cohasset's senior captains connected to knot the game at 1-1, as a through ball by Coner Buick led to a finish by Dave Santiago, who slid the ball to the bottom right corner just past sliding Norwell keeper Mike Allen.

Norwell continued to pound the ball towards the Cohasset net, but Brewer continued his brilliance, stopping shots off three consecutive corner kicks.

In the 37th minute, senior John Andrade sent senior captain Chris Clark in to beat the defense for a lower left strike, and give Cohasset a 2-1 halftime lead.

Although the Clippers controlled the ball most of the first half, and led 8-3 in shots, they opened the second half trailing by a goal. Six minutes into the second half, Norwell evened the score at 2-2 when sophomore Kevin McCord led the ball to Olson, who made two touches to the middle and drilled the ball to the lower left corner past the dive

Skippers harpoon Whalers

Cohasset gridders kickoff season with 18-0 shutout of Nantucket

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

A balanced offensive attack combined with a defensive effort that prevented Nantucket from entering the red zone resulted in an impressive 18-0 shutout by the Cohasset Skippers on opening day last Saturday afternoon at Alumni Field.

The Whalers from Nantucket deferred on the opening coin toss, electing to kick to the Skippers.

Cohasset proceeded to march 67 yards on seven plays to reach pay dirt. All three backs — senior tailback DeWayne Morris, junior fullback Ted Straughn and senior captain quarterback Mike Dooley — carried the ball on this initial series. The key plays of the drive were a diving reception by senior captain wide receiver Chris Bilodeau for a first down and a 21-yard reception by senior tight end Sean Connolly.

Morris then went into the end zone untouched from 22 yards out behind the blocking of the right side of the offensive line, junior center Matt Casey, senior captain guard Steve Davis and sophomore rookie

A 'Devine' victory

Upset win for first year golfer not enough to lift Skippers

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

An upset win by Mike Devine over two-time South Shore League all-star Chris Redman, on Thursday, wasn't enough to lift the Cohasset golf team over Abington in its SSL opener.

Devine, a senior newcomer to the team this fall, shot a solid 4-over par 40 on the Cohasset Golf Club to edge Redman, 5.5-3.5 for nine holes. This improved Devine's personal record on the season to 3-1 playing out of the number one spot for the Skippers.

"Mike's been a real pleasant surprise for us so far," said Sweeney of Devine, who is also a star hockey player. "I knew he was good when I heard he was coming out for the team, but I had no way of predicting him earning the number one spot and playing so well out of it."

Unfortunately, the remaining five Abington golfers won 10 more holes than their Cohasset counterparts to take the decision in match play, 31-23. The loss dropped the Skippers to 2-2 overall.

Prior to the league opener, the Cohasset golfers topped Quincy, 32-22, then split a pair of meetings with East Bridgewater.

The Skippers traveled to E.B.'s home Ridder Country Club on Tuesday, and fell 218-232 in stroke play, the scoring system used by the Patriot League. Sweeney felt his team struggled with the adjustment from match play, where one point is won per hole, to stroke play, where every shot is counted against the team total.

"Our guys didn't really step to the challenge," noted Sweeney. "When a hole blows up in match play, it's only one point lost, and guys start thinking about the next hole before they're done sometimes. You can't do that in stroke play. We had some guys see things go from bad to worse on a few holes today, and wind up shooting eights or nines. Those were killers."

Fortunately, the Skippers were able to rebound with a narrow 28-26 win over E.B. at Cohasset Golf Club 24 hours later. The hosts trailed with the first four players from each team in the clubhouse, but Cohasset junior Jack Carroll led the comeback charge, winning eight of nine holes from his counterpart out of the sixth and final scoring spot.

Senior captain Mike Hajjar has been playing well out of the number two spot for the Skippers, averaging a score of 41 per nine holes while compiling a 2-2 record.

"Mike's been his old steady self," noted Sweeney.

Another pleasant surprise for the team has been the play of freshman Kevin Barber, who has gone a perfect 3-0 out of the three spot.

Juniors Tim Pilczak and Colin MacGruder have each compiled records of 2-2 out of the fourth and fifth spots in the rotation, respectively.

Junior Chris Simms has shared the sixth spot with Carroll (2-0) to date and split decisions in his two matches.

The Skippers entered this week with a full slate of SSL opponents this week. They hosted defending league champ Harwich on Monday, traveled to Mashpee on Tuesday and returned home to take on Carver yesterday. They get back into action on Monday at home versus Norwell.

Clippers sail past Skippers

Cohasset girls prove no match for Norwell booters

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

What was supposed to be a close, competitive South Shore League match turned into a one-sided affair at Norwell High School's soccer field Saturday night.

Led by goals from four different players, the Norwell girls came away with a dominating 5-0 victory over Cohasset.

Jackie Vickers, Meaghan Wiley, Colby Tallman and Lauren Strazzula all scored in the second half within 21 minutes of one another.

Wiley's was arguably the goal of the night. With her back to Skippers keeper CeCelia Chapman 15 yards out, the junior midfielder turned and fired a perfect shot to the far post with her left foot. It was Wiley's fifth score of the year.

Vickers started the scoring in the fourth minute of the game. After junior midfielder Jenn Guiney fought for control of a deflected throw-in, Vickers stormed down the right side of the field and lofted a shot over the head of Chapman.

The sophomore striker also capped the scoring in the 64th minute with a goal from the left side.

The score was 1-0 at the half, as some fine work from Cohasset's defenders, led by Rachel Garber and sweeper Holly Graham, and four saves from Chapman kept the score close.

Other than these positives, however, it was a bad night all-around for the Lady Skippers. They did not get anywhere near Norwell's net until the 12th minute, when Sarah McMorris applied pressure on the right side of the field. Norwell defender Mollie Phillips thwarted the attack before it materialized into anything.

A header by Mary Silvia off a corner by Casey Anderson beat Norwell keeper Jessica Baxter, but went just wide of the net.

Baxter was never seriously tested after that, and recorded her second shutout of the year.

To make matters worse for head coach Deb Beal's team, senior defender and co-captain Brenna O'Donnell went down with a knee injury after colliding with a Norwell player.

O'Donnell fell to the ground, and the referee immediately blew his whistle to stop play. Soon after play resumed five minutes later, an ambulance and stretcher came to the field.

Beal said the good news is that there is no tear in the ACL. O'Donnell is wearing a brace and using crutches, however, and her knee is swollen enough that a doctor's appointment to examine the knee on Monday tackle Dan McCarthy. The attempted extra point kick was blocked. Leaving it 6-0 Skippers with 7:40 left in the first quarter.

The Whalers first offensive possession started with a 27-yard pass completion, taking them into Skipper territory. After a couple of short running plays, Davis and senior end Robbie Carpenter combined to force a fumble with a hard hit and junior defensive tackle Matt Baroudi recovered it on the Cohasset 35-yard line.

This would turn out to be Nantucket's only real offensive threat of the day as senior captain linebacker Tony Truglia (6 tackles), cornerback Connolly (5 tackles, 2 tipped passes) and Carpenter (4 tackles, 1fi sacks, forced fumble) led a defensive effort that limited the Whalers to only 100 yards of total offense.

The Skippers next scoring drive started at their own 33-yard line with :30 left in the first quarter. It was a classic 16 play, eight minute drive. Morris carried seven times for 48 yards behind great blocking by senior left tackle Dan Tarpey, sophomore left guard Nick Arment, Casey, Davis, and McCarthy. The drive ended with Bilodeau hauling in a 21-yard pass in the left corner of the end zone from Dooley. The 2-point conversion pass fell just out of the reach of Bilodeau. With 2:31 left in the second quarter, Cohasset had a 12-0 advantage.

The third quarter had the Skipper secondary of junior Joe Durkin, junior Crandon Leahy, Bilodeau and Connolly breaking up several key pass attempts by Nantucket, while the defensive front of Davis, Carpenter, Baroudi, and junior tackle Leo Clougherty put on a relentless pass rush.

The Skippers final scoring drive, a quick six play push, ended with a quarterback option to the right side. QB Mike Dooley kept the ball and split the first two Whaler defenders untouched thanks to key blocks by the right side of the offensive line and a nice kick-out block by tight end Connolly. The lone Whaler between Dooley and the end zone was left in his tracks as Dooley pulled a 180 degree spin move just as the defender closed in for the tackle. The senior signal caller then sprinted into the end zone for a 44-yard scoring effort, giving the Skippers an 18-0 lead with 9:13 to play in the game. The pass conversion play fell incomplete.

All in all an impressive start for the Skippers with solid two-way play from Casey, Davis, Connolly, Straughn, and Bilodeau, combined with varsity rookies Durkin, Leahy, Clougherty, Baroudi, McCarthy, Carpenter, and Morris exceeding expectations, and Arment, Tarpey, Silvia, Dooley, and Truglia turning in fine opening day performances.

Football Forecast

The Cohasset Skippers football team (1-0) will take on the 2002 Catholic Central Large league champion Archbishop Williams (0-0) on Friday night at 7 PM at Alumni Field. Archies is coming off a 10-1 season, losing to Abington in the preliminary round of the High School Super Bowl format last November, they are returning six starters to this years squad.

If "Isabel" plays major havoc on Friday, the postponement date is Sunday, Sept 21 at 5 PM.

However, in checking the records over the years, Cohasset has never lost a football game in the middle of a Hurricane, so pull out the foul weather gear and dress like a "Skipper" and bring her on!

Needless to say, defenders such as Joe Durkin (#20) also did their job. Cohasset's D limited the Whalers to just 100 yards on the way to Saturday's 18-0 whitewashing.

had to be cancelled. The examination has been re-scheduled for Friday, Beal said.

Silvia, a junior, came in for O'Donnell.

"She stepped up big-time for us," Beal said.

While the Skippers played their poorest game of the year after solid efforts against Scituate and Mashpee, Beal gave the Clippers much of the credit for their victory.

"Norwell played a great game and we couldn't keep up with them," the fifth-year coach said. "They beat us to every single ball on the field and seemed to outwork us for possession."

From the start, head coach Bruce Emerson's team used their quickness to get touches, and their height advantage over most of Cohasset's players to win headers.

"The key to the game was that every chance on the ball, we got the touch," Emerson said.

While the forwards and midfielders played very well, as evidenced by the five goals, the defense was arguably better. Senior Katie Helm was especially magnificent, time and again playing Cohasset's long balls back into the Skippers' half of the field.

Helm even came close to scoring, missing by inches on a 35-yard bomb at the end of the first half.

Phillips frustrated Cohasset attackers all over the field. Caitlin Jackson, Victoria Nicastro and Elizabeth Hathaway all contributed to the defensive effort, as well.

Cohasset's Nicole Whitney (right) tries to beat a pair of Scituate players to the ball in non-league match at Scituate High.

Following a tough game against Mashpee the previous day, Emerson said he was pleased with everyone on the team following the Cohasset match.

"We passed better, and we were more aggressive," the coach said. "We always get up for Cohasset."

Saturday's was the third win in four days for the Lady Clippers. They defeated Hull, 5-0, on Wednesday, and got by Mashpee, 5-3. Wiley, Vickers, Strazzula, Jackson, Emily Martindale and Jenna Zarick all scored during that stretch.

Overall, the Clippers are 3-1, with a 3-0 record in the South Shore League.

Cohasset, meanwhile, dropped to 0-2-1 overall, 0-1-1 in league play. The Skippers lost a hard-fought game to Scituate, 2-0, and earned a draw with Mashpee, 3-3. Cohasset came back from an early 2-0 deficit in that one, with senior midfielder Jenn Buckley scoring two goals, including the equalizer with 4:49 to play. Senior Gillian Weber scored the other.

There were concerns after Saturday's game about the team's chemistry, concerns that Beal hope have dissipated this week. The Skippers had a tough match against Abington on Tuesday and face another test tomorrow against surprising Carver.

"Players I have relied on to be role models and example setters on the field are not getting it done," Beal said. "I don't doubt their ability and their desire to win. I think we need to regroup and understand that things are constantly changing and that the 11 best players are going to play regardless of what grade they are in."

Dana-Farber Golf Tourney

On September 20, 2003, Putting Fore A Cure will host a golf tournament at the Atlantic Country Club in Plymouth, MA in a benevolent effort to graciously help raise money to move one step closer toward the ultimate dream, a cure for Cancer. All proceeds will benefit the Jimmy Fund, the primary fundraising heart of the world-renowned Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

Putting Fore A Cure was started in honor of a former Holbrook resident that is currently undergoing treatment for non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. Mark was diagnosed in December 2002, and began treatment after his 34th birthday in January. With the innovative treatments of the Harbor Medical Oncology Center and the support of his new bride, family & friends, Mark is currently Cancer free. Putting Fore A Cure is a way to give back to the foundation that has helped Mark and others become Cancer free.

Please join with us in our united effort and be an integral part of one of the most respected charities in New England, The Jimmy Fund. Each day critical research provides newfound hope and promise; however, to achieve a Cure we must raise funds. Therefore, we invite you to participate in this charitable event.

If you would like to be a sponsor, golfer, make a donation, place an ad in the program book, be a hole, tee or green sponsor please send an email to "mailto:PUTTINGFOREACURE@AOL.COM."

Split decisions

CHS Field hockey squad wins one, loses one to open season

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High field hockey team opened the season on Friday with an 8-0 manhandling of Sturgis Academy.

Senior Courtney Caron led the charge with a hat trick and an assist and senior netminder Caitlin Condon recorded six saves for the shutout.

Sophomore Katie James had a goal and an assist, while senior Rachel Doyle and sophomore Mia Lieb-Lappen each added solo tallies.

The girls dropped to 1-1, losing a tough 3-2 decision to East Bridgewater on Monday. Caron scored her fourth goal of the season and Kristen Howard added the other.

A third straight non-league game was scheduled for yesterday afternoon, the girls slated to travel a few miles to the south to take on Scituate High. Home games versus perennial Patriot League powers Duxbury (Friday, 3:30 p.m.) and Hingham (next Tuesday, 3:30 p.m.) were next up, and coach Deb Bostwick hoped these would be good tune-ups for the South Shore League opener against Harwich at home a week from today (Sept. 25, 4 p.m. start).

Another thriller

of Brewer.

Play between the teams began to get rough, with Norwell's senior captain Garret Bates receiving a yellow card for repeated fouls.

Olsen struck the game winner for Norwell in the 53rd minute. Beach led in Olson, who beat two defenders to breakaway and beat Brewer to the lower right side of the net. Olsen flourished on this night, despite getting repeatedly pushed and fouled. Cohasset's J.T. Oronte received a yellow card in the 66th minute for an off the ball hit on Olsen.

"You just get in the moment, and there is lots of adrenaline," offered Olsen after the game. "You've just got to forget it and get back up."

Norwell had to hold off a hard-charging Cohasset squad over the final 15 minutes to preserve the win.

The Skippers had a golden opportunity in the 72nd minute, when Chris Clark was awarded a direct kick just outside the box. Clark shot a bullet, which seemed labeled for the top left corner, but Allen made an outstanding full-extension dive to tip the ball over the net to protect the one goal lead. Allen's save was, by far, the play of the night, not only the great save, but also the situation in which it occurred.

This Saturday night contest had everything you could ask for in a soccer game: great saves, great goals, great intensity, and just overall good play. It seems hard to believe these two teams can play a more exciting game when they meet again in Cohasset on September 25th.

Then again, when it is Norwell-Cohasset, you just never know.

Skippers top Abington, 4-0

The Cohasset boys bounced back in a big way with a 4-0 win over SSL rival Abington on the road Tuesday.

Sophomore striker Aidan Buick scored twoce, while senior captain Dave Santiago and sophomore Ben Libby added solo tallies. For Libby, this was his first varsity goal.

Sophomore keeper Prescott Busk recorded the shutout in his first varsity start.

IT'S HAPPENING

Amanda to sign 'Millennium Girl'

Buttonwood Books & Toys welcomes Amanda C. Thompson, Sunday Sept. 21 from 2-4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset for the release of her debut novel, "Millennium Girl." Amanda of Cohasset has just turned 14, however the bigger celebration in her life is the release of her first novel, "Millennium Girl". "Millennium Girl" tells the story of Carolyn, an ordinary preteen girl who is abruptly uprooted from her life in Alaska to move to California. In this utterly unfamiliar world, Carolyn struggles through her first days at school, her first encounters with bullies, her first attempts at making friends, and her first new crush, Matt. When Matt's mother is hospitalized, Carolyn strives to help her withdrawn friend. Through this heart-rending tale, Carolyn grows and learns what it is to be a true friend.

Amanda is a freshman at Cohasset High School. She wrote this book primarily because she loves to write and had set for herself the goal of writing a novel by the time she was 13. However, she freely credits her friend Molly Gallagher for keeping her on task. Weekly she would ask Amanda what she had written and ask to see her work. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Cohasset artist featured in two noted galleries

The works of Cohasset artist Judy St. Peter are now being featured at both the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham and at the acclaimed St. George Gallery on Newbury Street in Boston. Her collections can be seen at both locations through the end of October.

St. Peter, a gallery artist with the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, has selected "Full Spectrum" as the theme for her showing at the Conservatory. This collection represents an assortment of techniques used by St. Peter, ranging from black and white renderings to full-color oil paintings of landscapes, city scenes and, her passion, animal art.

The St. George Gallery is featuring 15 of St. Peter's works that the artist calls more interpretational and abstract. Her collection there represents bolder landscapes, eclectic city scenes and playful interpretations of animals and nature.

Her steadfast compassion and active concern for animals and wildlife compliments, and often drives, the expression in her work. A gradual transition from watercolor to acrylic to oil, she believes, also brought out a more expressive and uninhibited side to her work. St. Peter focuses primarily on abstract elements, creating pieces through movement and energy. She interprets her subjects with playful use of color, texture and line.

The public is invited to a private reception at the St. George Gallery at 245 Newbury St. in Boston on Thursday, Oct. 9, from 6 – 8 p.m.

For information call the St. George Gallery at (617) 450-0321.

The South Shore Conservatory is located at 1 Conservatory Drive in Hingham. That collection can be viewed any time during the week from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Special art for special event

The "At the Edge of the Sea Art Show/Fund Raiser" celebration honoring Cohasset's maritime history, and saluting the Historical Society's 75th anniversary, the Pratt building's 100 years, and the 154th commemoration of the Brig St. John is shaping up to be an event not to be missed. An internationally recognized artist, W. K. Gilbert, whose commissioned fine art pieces hang in corporate offices, and homes in North America, South America, Scandinavia, the Orient, England, and throughout Europe, will be doing four pieces specifically for the Cohasset Historical Society's Show: among them will be the Brig St. John and another called Approaching Minots Light circa 1850.

Although Gilbert started out with an interest in playing ball, a blown knee turned him to his other love: art. However, he has managed very effectively to combine his love of sports with his love of painting: he has done work for the Boston Celtics, the Boston Red Sox, the Coast Guard Academy, the Boston Bruins, the New England Patriots, the Ferrari Club of America, Sugarloaf USA, as well as Carol Baldwin Breast Cancer Research Fund, and the Timothy Hill Children's Ranch.

Gilbert will be hanging other pieces and will be offering giclée prints at the event, all of which will benefit the Historical Society. The opening reception-dinner is on Thursday, Oct. 2 her life, and serve as inspirational subjects for her many oil paintings. In fact, her coastal paintings are the basis for her art show, currently being held at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Save the dates of Oct. 2-5 for the gala event. Anyone who would like to share ideas, expertise or time, call 781-383-1168.

Alemian's paintings all vary in size, but share the same theme. From Sand Hills in Scituate, to Minot's light, to Little Harbor, it seems she has captured every beautiful vista the South Shore has to offer.

Through her paintings, Alemian said she has found a "way to maintain the natural beauty we have, and let it live on."

She remembers spending days at Minot beach in Scituate when high tide didn't leave beach-goers searching for a sandy spot to sit. Because of erosion over the years, sitting on the beach during high tide now requires moving beach chairs up onto the rocks or sea wall on much of the beach.

Most of Alemian's work focuses on the landscape of a scene rather than the structures.

"I don't do houses as a rule of thumb," she said, but admits that when they have a personality, mixed in with the beauty of the surroundings, she can't resist.

In fact, one of her favorite paintings is a row of houses on a sea-wall by the lighthouse in Scituate. One day in January, two years ago, Alemian was struck by the beauty of the lighting and the character of the scene. She made a quick sketch of the area, intending to come back when the weather was warmer. When she returned months later, the beauty of the winter sun had vanished, giving way to a much different feeling summer sun. Alemian returned again the following January, and this time made a more detailed sketch and took photographs. She was then able to reconstruct the area on canvas, naming her painting, "Sand Hills."

However, Alemian said she usually doesn't like to paint from photos because they tend to "flatten things out."

"I tend to be the kind of painter who reacts to what is in front of me," she said.

Alemian much prefers painting on site because landscapes are constantly changing, especially where lighting is concerned. Scenery can take on a completely different feeling just from the changing of sunlight, she said.

Each spring, when she ventures out to paint the first of her landscapes for the year, she chooses locations she has been before, in order to warm herself up to painting again and get familiar with nature, while being able to concentrate on the little details she has become familiar with.

"Some I come back to because they're such interesting subjects," she said, adding that when a particular scene is new, it sometimes takes a few trips before she feels she has adequately captured the essence of the scene.

Alemian graduated from Scituate High School in 1977, and went on to earn a bachelor of fine arts in painting from Mass College of Art, and a masters of fine art in painting from Boston University. She has also studied with Graham Nickson at the New York Studio School of Drawing, Painting and Sculpture, but can never stray far from the beauty of home. The paintings in Alemian's current show are mainly landscape portraits of Cohasset, Scituate, and Marshfield. She feels the ledges and coastal waters of this area are a very important part of the character of the towns and provide a uniqueness to the area. It is because of these naturally beautiful features that she has chosen to call the South Shore home for many years.

Currently, Alemian is doing graphic design work for the South Shore Art Center, and is one of its Gallery Artists. Her painting "Sand Hills" won second place in the Juried show at this year's South Shore Art Festival.

Alemian's award-winning work has been included in selected exhibitions throughout New England and in a number of private and corporate collections. Her exhibition of plein air oil paintings, which focus on the changing coastal environment, will be on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library until Oct. 29.

Local nurses to read from anthology

On Sunday afternoon, Sept. 28, four nurses from the New England area will read their work, including pieces from "Intensive Care: More Poetry and Prose by Nurses," edited by Cortney Davis and Judy Schaefer, an anthology from the University of Iowa Press published in May, 2003.

Frances Murphy Araujo, a resident of Weymouth, is a psychiatric nurse clinical specialist whose fiction has appeared in Kalliope, Lynx Eye, Reed Magazine, Washington Square and other journals. Her work has received a Pushcart Prize nomination. Currently she is working on a master of arts in English, with a specialty in writing, at the University of Massachusetts in Boston. She is also an instructor of psychiatric nursing at Boston College.

Celia Brown, currently of Falmouth, is a native of Ireland with nurse's training from both England and the US. She holds a bachelor's degree and has earned her master's from Dartmouth College. She is the author of a poetry collection, "Mending the Skies." Her work has appeared in numerous journals and anthologies, most recently "An Anthology of Cape Women Writers"; (Winter 2003) and "Intensive Care." Brown has read her work at the Library of Congress and won a Jenny McKean Fellowship from The George Washington University. She is a member of the Falmouth Poets Workshop.

Hanne Bernstein of Brookline is a registered nurse from Denmark, who came to live in Massachusetts three years ago. Since moving to the US she has taken a break from the practice of nursing. This has given her the opportunity to reflect on and write about her many years of work with the critically ill patients she cared for on intensive care and oncology units. Bernstein writes poetry and short stories.

Joan Stack Kovach is nurse manager at McLean SouthEast, an inpatient psychiatric unit in Plymouth. For five years she wrote a regular column for the BayState Nurse News and she currently contributes to Nursing Spectrum Magazine. Kovach has written feature articles for The Patriot Ledger, and is a co-author of the book Peer Consultation. She lives in Cohasset.

"Intensive Care," this new collection of creative writing by registered nurses is a companion volume to "Between the Heartbeats, Poetry and Prose by Nurses," a first anthology, published in 1995, and still on the University of Iowa publishers bestseller list. Co-editors Cortney Davis and Judy Schaefer, say, "We are thrilled to include the work of Fran, Celia, Hanne, and Joan in this anthology. Theirs is some of what was chosen from hundreds of submissions. After a rigorous selection process, only the best poetry and prose was finally accepted for this collection which includes the writing of RNs from the USA, Europe, and Central America."

"Intensive Care" is available at local bookstores, online from amazon.com or from the University of Iowa Press.

WORSHIP GUIDE

Peace and prayer service St. Stephen's

An evening Vespers Service, a half-hour of peace and prayer will be held every Sunday at 5 p.m. at Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave. The worship is open to all. There is no communion, no collection, no sermon. Instead, there is soft music and quiet prayer ranging from T.S. Eliot to Taizé to John Wesley. It is a half-hour respite between the busy weekend and the demanding schedule of the week ahead. God's voice that comes in silence keeps each one in the midst too much or too little.

Vesper is the evening star so it appropriately names the worship that takes place as the light fades and the rhythm of the day slows. The gathering dusk calls each to reflect on the gifts of the passing day. The prayer recalls: "Each thing we have received, from you it came, O God." A single candle stands on a small table in front. Its flame focuses thoughts and prayers as worshipers sit in silence, lost in care or thoughts of others, feeling grateful, embracing the peace. Vespers is mentioned in the medieval Book of Hours. In the Russian Orthodox Church, vespers is called "Prayers at Lamp Lighting Time."

All are welcome to close the day with peacefulness and prayer every Sunday at 5 p.m.

ASP informational meeting is Sept. 21

The Second Congregational Church will hold an informational meeting for the Appalachia Service Project, Sunday, Sept. 21 at 8 p.m. Every June, volunteers participate in ASP, traveling to communities in Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia and Tennessee to make home repairs for those who cannot afford to have them done. The meeting will serve as the first of many gathering to take place in preparation for the trip, after school gets out next summer. Volunteers must at least be of high school age. A slide show of last year's trip will be shown. For more information, please contact Gary Ritts at the Second Congregational Church (781) 383-0345. Registration deadline is Oct. 1.

Misener in trumpet recital

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now beginning its 12th season, St. Stephen's Church is presenting trumpet player, Matthew Misener in a trumpet and organ concert on Sunday, Sept. 28 at 3 p.m. The program will contain compositions of John Stanley, Hovhannes, Haydn, and Svoboda.

Accompanying Misener will be Boston organist, G. Fredrick Guzasky. The following Sunday, the duo will again be performing at the St. Nicholas Methodist Church in Hull as they begin their "Music at St. Nicholas Concert Series."

Coming up Roses

Mattea finds new life on current music tour

By Matthew Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Kathy Mattea clicked with country music's mainstream from the mid-1980s through the mid-1990s. Hits such as "Eighteen Wheels and a Dozen Roses" and "Love at the Five and Dime" fit right in commercially with the standard Nashville Music Row fare of the era.

But even then, Mattea as a singer/songwriter and her music were as much informed by folk music and its traditions as by country — in style, content and sensibility. In recent years, the West Virginia-born singer has followed a deepening interest in Irish and Celtic music traditions and their historical forerunning to American country music. Consequently, her own music has leaned progressively to a folk-sided country style.

Country performer Kathy Mattea plays Memorial Hall Friday, Sept. 19.

This is how Mattea is heard on her latest CD — Roses — her debut on a new label, Narada Records, after a long and profitable relationship with her old company, Mercury. The singer is supporting this album on her current tour, which stops by at Plymouth Memorial Hall this Friday evening.

"I guess I have been sort of out of the limelight by comparison since the days of the hits," said Mattea. "But I've continued making records, and I left my old label when it seemed like Mercury was moving in a new direction in their country department, and it no longer felt like a good fit for me. I started dabbling in the mold of traditional Irish and Celtic music in the late '80s, travelling to Scotland and meeting new people and musicians over there, and playing onstage and in the studio with them. That's the direction my music's been moving in since then, and for me it's felt like the right direction to go. I think in a sense I've rediscovered the fun of playing music, away from certain pressures I used to feel in the mainstream of country music, the whole starmaking, image-making thing.

"I've always had a particular slant on country music, one which is bluegrass and acoustic-folk based, and not always in tune with the more commercial side of Nashville. I've also always been interested in lots of different styles of music, particularly the mountain influences that I remember growing up in West Virginia. Altogether, I see my new album as more of a contemporary folk album," Mattea said.

Essentially a singer/guitarist for most of her career, Mattea on her new disc extends her instrumental talents to the Celtic tin whistle, while the album overall features such session-band instrumentation as the concertina and harmonium to go with the more familiar guitars, fiddles and keyboards. The disc's new batch of songs, most of them penned by Mattea, attempt to explore new emotional layers of joy and sorrow, loss and resilience. In all, it makes for an album that surely transcends the limitations of country music.

Mattea had a number of other hits during her commercial heyday, such as "Walking Away a Winner" and "Come From the Heart," the latter even reworked for use as a Reebok ad jingle. The singer is currently Con man Roy (Nic Cage) starts to clean up his act.

Ridley Scott, leader of 'Men'

Director isn't afraid of being borderline offensive with first comedy

By Ed Symkus
ESYMKUS@CNC.COM

Sir Ridley Scott has never been known for his light touch as a director. His canon includes violent films such as "Alien," "Black Rain," "Gladiator" and "Black Hawk Down." So it's quite a surprise to see that his newest, "Matchstick Men," is, unmistakably, a comedy.

Scott says he's flirted with comedy before. He points out this his film "Thelma & Louise" had comic moments. But with "Matchstick Men," he jumps into comedy with both feet. Nicolas Cage plays a con man mentor to fledgling con man Sam Rockwell. While Rockwell's Frank has a laid-back lackadaisical approach to his work, Cage's Roy is all business. Roy is also afflicted with obsessive compulsive disorder, which makes him repeat phrases, become a neat freak and display a vast array of nervous facial and vocal tics. His performance is funny, but he teeters near the edge of being offensive.

"That was hard, there was a very specific discussion between us," says Scott of Cage. "We talked about it at length — at what moment does it not become amusing and become sad? But I was never really worried about it. I knew Nic was because he has to do it. He has to find the rhythm — where do you insert these remarks and tics?"

Most of that was worked out in what Scott calls a "really unusually good rehearsal period, which was just over two weeks."

But Scott, who has often been referred to as a manipulator as much as a director, didn't exactly come clean with all of his actors at those rehearsals. The character of Dr. Klein, played by Bruce Altman, is a psychiatrist who tries to help Roy with his many problems. Their scenes together are totally convincing as doctor-patient meetings.

"When Bruce finally saw the film, he was amazed that it was a comedy," says the recently knighted, deep-voiced Scott. "And that was good, because I wanted him to play it straight. So I didn't even discuss the tone of the film with him. I wanted him to be absolutely straight, head-on honest."

Though Scott is famous for verbal altercations with some of his actors — his disagreements with Harrison Ford about his character in "Blade Runner" are legendary — he claims the biggest challenge he still faces in making films has to do with the development of the script.

"That's the hardest thing to do," he says. "I've probably developed 65 percent of my material. It's a big challenge, but it's essential. You can't wait for a script to fall on your table; it may never happen."

The Bay Colony production of "A Chorus Line" is now on stage at Foxborough's Orpheum Theatre.

New life to an old classic

Dancer-turned-director brings 'A Chorus Line' to life

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Dancer Leslie Woodies will never forget the first time she saw the musical "A Chorus Line."

"From the very first performance I attended at the Shubert Theatre in Boston in 1978, my life was changed forever," explained Woodies by telephone from her Quincy home last week. "I should have been in a ballet rehearsal across the street at the old Music Hall (now the Wang Theatre), but I had a Wednesday afternoon off so I got a nosebleed seat for 'A Chorus Line', which was the hottest show in town at that time. When the character of Cassie came out to do 'The Music and the Mirror', I just knew that this was my life, my purpose, my role. It was like she was speaking to me and telling my story."

Woodies, director of the Bay Colony production of "A Chorus Line" currently at Foxborough's Orpheum Theatre, had worked with Agnes DeMille and Merce Cunningham and was a soloist with the Boston Ballet under E. Virginia Williams when she was introduced to the Broadway musical that had won a Pulitzer Prize and nine Tony Awards just a few years earlier.

New York theatergoers had first become aware of "A Chorus Line" in the mid-1970s when Joseph Papp produced it off-Broadway under the aegis of his New York Shakespeare Festival.

With music by Marvin Hamlisch, book by James Kirkwood and Nicholas Dante, the musical, while a collaboration, owed much of its success to its true creator, director and choreographer Michael Bennett. Though Bennett, already a multi-nominated Broadway choreographer, knew the show would need commercial appeal, from its earliest inception he saw it as the story of "gypsies," the theatrical term for chorus dancers. Bennett had himself been a gypsy early in his career and he was eager to create a show which would honor a dancer's life.

Instead of a traditional plot, "A Chorus Line" has what is referred to as a "staging scheme."

Presented without intermission, the show depicts an audition for a Broadway musical at which 17 dancers are chosen by a director and a choreography assistant.

On July 25, 1975, "A Chorus Line" opened on Broadway at the Shubert Theatre. It closed there

Corned beef hash

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Corned beef hash is a combination of onion, potato, and corned beef that has been diced and sautéed until crispy. Often considered a leftover, this simple dish can border on the inedible or, in the hands of an appreciative home cook, it can be about as good as it gets. I set out to explore what makes one hash a winner and another a truck-stop stomach filler.

The first issue was the meat. Ignoring the name of the recipe, you can also use roast beef, turkey or smoked turkey. Unfortunately, a lot of corned beef is not very good and one has to purchase too much of it. An easy solution is to buy half-inch slices of corned beef from the deli counter. I have actually "corned" my own beef (the results are fabulous) but I don't recommend that investment of time for a simple hash.

For the potatoes, almost any type will do, but I preferred Russets. Some recipes suggest that the potatoes be precooked, but if one uses a half-inch dice, this step is unnecessary. They cook quickly in the skillet.

A major difference among corned beef hash recipes is the type of liquid called for. The choices are gravy, heavy cream, water, and chicken stock. The gravy was very good, but who has gravy on hand? (Donôt even think about purchasing canned or powdered gravies.) The water was bland. The heavy cream made the hash greasy. The chicken stock, predictably, was the winner.

Three quarters of a cup did the trick.

Among the other ingredients often found in hash (onion, pepper, celery, carrot, mushroom, and peas) the only one really worth using is onion. (Red pepper does work with smoked turkey, however.) The combination of onion, beef, and potato is not only simple, it is superior to a confused medley of ingredients. Other ingredients included in my final recipe are salt, pepper, and parsley. That's it.

One trick to cooking the hash: Once the onions are softened in oil and butter, the potatoes are added and allowed to cook for 10 minutes to form a crust. Then the meat and stock are added and the whole lot is cooked again for 5 to 7 minutes undisturbed to further develop a crust. The mixture is broken up with a spatula and cooked a final 5 to 7 minutes to form a final, crisp crust. This provides great texture and flavor.

CORNED BEEF HASH

You can purchase half-inch slices of corned beef from the deli counter in your supermarket; there's no need for a whole corned beef. I like to serve this hash with eggs and toast.

1 tablespoon olive oil
1 tablespoon butter
1 medium onion, cut into 1/2-inch dice, about 1 1/4 cups
1 pound potatoes (russets preferred), peeled and cut into 1/2-inch dice, about 3 cups
2 cups corned beef, cut into 1/2-inch dice
3/4 cup low sodium chicken broth (Swanson's)
1/2 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1/4 cup chopped fresh flat leaf parsley

1. Heat a heavy 12-inch nonstick or well-seasoned cast iron pan over medium heat. Add the oil and butter and, once the foam subsides, add the onion. Toss to coat with the oil/butter and cook until translucent, about 5 minutes, stirring frequently. Add the potatoes and cook for an additional 10 minutes, stirring occasionally or until the potatoes are dark golden brown.

2. Add the meat and stir to evenly incorporate. Add the chicken stock and the salt and pepper and stir to combine. Press the hash down into the pan with the spatula. Turn the heat to medium high and cook, undisturbed, for 5 to 7 minutes or until the bottom is nicely browned. Break up the hash, turning and mixing the crust into the mixture and pat the hash down once more with the spatula. Allow to cook undisturbed for another 5 to 7 minutes or until a crisp crust is formed. Taste for seasonings, adding salt and pepper if necessary. Serve immediately with fresh parsley sprinkled on top.

ROAST BEEF OR TURKEY VARIATION

Substitute roast beef or turkey for the corned beef. Add one teaspoon fresh thyme to the hash along with the salt and pepper. (If you have leftover gravy, use it instead of the chicken stock.)

SMOKED TURKEY VARIATION

Substitute smoked turkey for the corned beef. Add 1/2 cup diced red pepper (half-inch dice) to the pan along with the onion.

applying her new folk/country/Celtic sound to a new Christmas album, Joy for Christmas Day, set for release later this year.

Said Mattea, "We're mixing the new songs with the old hits on the current tour. Some of the old hits have been rearranged somewhat. But altogether, we're really enjoying it. It's quite the eclectic show, which is pretty much my goal these days."

But "Matchstick Men" did fall on his table.

"My good lady said to me, 'Meet [screenwriters] Ted and Nic Griffin.' She occasionally socializes with them and she likes reading their stuff. She'd been reading ['Matchstick Men'] and said, 'You should read this script.' I said OK. But you know how it is with spouses. You never really get around to it. So she bullied me on a Saturday morning and said, 'You have to read this. Read this now.' And I read it and thought, 'Good lord. This could be really rather good. I have to do this next.' "

Scott is well known for previewing his films well in advance of their release date, and paying close attention to the reactions of those preview audiences. Two previews of "Legend," an early Tom Cruise film about unicorns and fairies and princesses, didn't go well, and close to a half hour was removed from the film before its release.

"We started to get insecure after the previews," recalls Scott, "because I thought we really had something. I just don't know what it was. It was like a wrong time. Now they're doing all these fantasy and fairy stories like 'Lord of the Rings,' and God, I felt like I've been there."

No changes were made after previews of "Matchstick Men," because the screenings went well. But that didn't surprise Scott.

"It's because of the strength of the material," he says. "It's a good sign for any script when you're trying to cut back, but you can't. That's because every scene means something. It's like trying to get rid of a piece of a jigsaw puzzle. You can't; it has to go in. So that was a good sign. I had that kind of confidence when we were making it."

"Matchstick Men" opens nationally on Sept. 12.

New life to an old classic

on April 28, 1990, after 6,137 performances.

Over the years, on Broadway as well as on numerous tours, the show has employed hundreds of dancers who could relate well to its story. Woodies was first cast as "Cassie" in the Broadway company in 1979, then quickly tapped to join the show's first international tour that same year. It was immediately clear to her that the show's creator was still its most powerful creative force.

"We were trained with an iron fist by Michael Bennett. It didn't matter where we were on tour, Michael would make surprise visits. The man knew absolutely what he wanted and he had absolute confidence that he was right. And he was right. You knew you were in the big leagues when you worked with Michael Bennett. Michael had everyone indoctrinated to believe that the most important thing we could do was to maintain the quality of the show. He also had a straightforward mission. He wanted the show to have an emotional impact on everyone who saw it," recalls Woodies of the Broadway legend whose innovative style helped make hits of 'Promises, Promises," "Follies" and "Dreamgirls." Bennett was just 44 years old when he died of lymphoma on July 2, 1987, at his home in Tucson. Woodies, who has both Broadway and feature film credits and now teaches at the Boston Conservatory, Harvard University and the Boston Ballet School, is among the many performers touched by Bennett's brilliance who now carry on his legacy.

"It is important that today's audiences find the inspiration and passion to break through some of their own fears. The story of 'A Chorus Line' is really one of courage. You have to have the courage to know that failure is not the end of your life. I'm trying to be true to Michael's work with the choreography I'm using in Foxborough. I love the 25-member company we have assembled I'm hard on them in some of the same ways Michael was hard on us, but I also spend a great deal of time wanting to hug them. They are just that good." Woodies is also pleased to welcome a new member to what she calls the "Cassie Sisterhood," a kind of unofficial sorority made up of the woman who have played the role originated almost 30 years ago by Donna McKechnie. "Kirsten McKinney is our 'Cassie' and she is just terrific. Kirsten had done the show once before when she approached me and asked if I would teach her how to do it the right way. I know firsthand that 'Cassie' is one of the hardest roles for a woman ever in Broadway history. It is very tough emotionally and, of course, the intense song and dance elements make it even more challenging. Even with all that, 'Cassie' is my favorite role of all time. I can't dance it anymore, so I need to pass it on to the next generation."

("A Chorus Line," under the direction of Leslie Woodies and with musical direction by Rob Goldman will be at the Orpheum Theatre, One School Street, Foxborough Common, through September 27. For tickets and information, call 508/543-2787 or visit www.orpheum.org.)

Fall renovation of lawns and gardens

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Perhaps no time of the year is more pleasant than early autumn in New England. Mild summer-like days intermingle with crisp, comfortable evenings providing an ideal opportunity to undertake many landscaping activities.

While many homeowners plan to initiate major planting projects during the spring season, unpredictable weather conditions, cold, soggy soils and a lengthy checklist of other gardening chores often pose many challenges for sowing, growing and planting. Warm, dry, workable soils and reliable moisture during the fall season make the month of September the ideal time to divide and transplant perennials, plant bulbs, trees and shrubs, renovate lawns and prepare new gardens.

Despite an overload of fall gardening projects, I find it impossible to focus on a singular task as birds, bugs, and creatures constantly distract me. Every few minutes I am reaching for my camera to photograph the frogs, toads, bunnies and chipmunks that seem to be everywhere. Hummingbirds zip back and forth from the feeder to lingering flowers as they fatten up for their long journey south. Butterflies drift through the landscape sipping nectar from butterfly bushes, asters, goldenrod and sedums. During the latter half of September, brightly colored orange and black Monarch butterflies should be particularly plentiful as eastern residents of this species prepare to make their miraculous journey to the mountains of Mexico.

Dramatic dragonflies and delicate damsel flies hover around the water garden and among the flowers on patrol for mosquitoes and other tasty morsels. Perhaps my favorite late summer visitors are the fascinating praying mantids. Often recognized as beneficial insects for the garden, it should be noted that these large insects would just as readily devour a ladybug, honeybee, or each other, as they would consume a grasshopper or other more destructive pest. The mantids' large size, alien appearance and their habit of cocking their triangular-shaped heads to observe intruders make them ideal candidates for numerous snapshots.

Autumn is the preferred time of year to install or renovate lawns. Warm soil temperatures facilitate the prompt germination of grass seed without interference from a profusion of weed seeds and Mother Nature usually assists with the important task of regular watering. Removal of weeds and crabgrass, either by hand or with the aid of selective herbicides, is usually recommended prior to undertaking a major lawn project. In particularly weedy areas having very few grass plants, a broad-spectrum herbicide, such as Roundup or Finale, which kills even the existing grass, may be the best course of action. If chemicals are used, be sure to read the label carefully, noting the length of time required for the herbicide to dissipate prior to seeding.

For established lawns, a vigorous raking should remove light thatch, but a large or neglected lawn may require heavier equipment to extricate a dense layer of dead grass plants which have become matted and reduce the ability of the surviving grass plants to secure moisture and nutrients. While its removal can be rather alarming, creating huge heaps of dead grass and a sparse appearance, the end result will be worth the temporarily unsightly lawn. Once complete, lime can be applied, the lawn overseeded, and in November, a winterizer fertilizer can be spread.

Aerating the soil at this time of year will also produce a significant improvement in your lawn's uptake of moisture and nutrients. This is particularly important for areas that tend to become compacted by heavy foot traffic, or for lawns planted over heavy soils. An aerator that pulls small, round plugs of soil out of the ground is the most effective and is best employed when the lawn is damp. The unsightly plugs can be raked up and used to fill low spots or shredded with a rotary mower once they are dry.

A very sparse lawn may benefit from a process known as slice seeding which involves a piece of equipment with a row of blades which cuts into the existing turf and as it proceeds, deposits seed and fertilizer. This method will often rejuvenate an established lawn and eliminate the need for a complete renovation.

For lawns that require a total overhaul, at least 4 inches of good loam should be present to grow healthy grass plants and 6 inches or more is preferred. Select grass seed mixtures appropriate for your light exposure and your anticipated usage of the area. There are formulas for sun or shade, mixtures that produce picture perfect lawns if they receive little traffic, or blends that provide a tough, resilient turf, which can withstand considerable trampling. These last formulas tend to contain fine-textured grasses that are not as easily crushed but may not give that vibrant, green carpet-like appearance that American homeowners seem to treasure. Inexpensive seed mixtures are rarely worth the time and effort it takes to spread them as the percentage of inert material or "other seed" can result in a sparse, weedy lawn that has to be reseeded in the spring. Read the labels.

Newly seeded areas should be watered lightly several times a day, if possible, to keep the soil moist without allowing large puddles to form which will cause the seed to float into low spots. Once a large percentage of the seed has sprouted, then longer periods of watering every few days are suggested. Early seeding will promote a sturdier turf that will better withstand the unpredictability of our New England winters.

LISTEN To Life

AN OLD STORY?

While conventional wisdom once held that hearing loss was as inevitable as wrinkled skin and gray hair, research shows that excessive noise is one of the leading causes of ear damage. In fact, about 75% of hearing loss in the typical American is caused by accumulated insult from noise. Not all of us endure the noise heard by a rock musician or a pilot, but we all are in danger of permanently injuring our hearing without even realizing it. More than 20 million of us are exposed to noxious noise levels on a regular basis. As a result, we are beginning to see evidence of an increase in hearing loss among youngsters that once was only observed in older adults.

Our noisy world offers no guarantees that we'll have perfect hearing throughout our lives. We must accept the responsibility of protecting our hearing, in our recreational pursuits and our home and work environments, and do all we can to correct impairments. If you don't hear as well as you feel you should, don't wait until you feel left out. Have your hearing checked by a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. Here at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, achieving your optimum hearing potential is our business. PH: 781-337-1144. We also have an office in Abington.

P.S. Dangerous noise levels attack the inner ear's 16,000 hair cells, which are responsible for converting sound into electrical impulses that are relayed to the brain.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17

The moon continues to travel in Gemini, and Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, is preparing to change its motion. That means that there may be delays, unexpected obstacles or breakdowns. Most likely, things won't go as planned. Keep it light and focus on the positives. Lunar alignments to Mercury and Pluto this afternoon and evening warn you to choose your words carefully; avoid signing contracts or making long-term commitments.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18

Yesterday's planetary combination affects today as well. The moon continues its travel in Gemini, active until 11:50 p.m. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:03 p.m. A new moon will culminate next Thursday, September 25. Handle a variety of jobs, errands; finish old business rather than starting anything new. Kick back and enjoy favorite pastimes this evening.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19

The moon enters the sign Cancer at 12:07 a.m., placing a focus on home, family and domestic responsibilities today and tomorrow. Others may be moody, hypersensitive. Be more loving and nurturing. Influences are prime for cleaning out and reorganizing your home or work area. Get your life in order. A lunar alignment to Saturn makes for a quiet evening. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

The planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. At 4:53 a.m. Mercury, standing at 12-degrees Virgo, begins direct travel. The next Mercury retrograde period will begin December 17. The Cancer moon continues active travel throughout the day. Tackle jobs in and around your home; you can be most productive. Share a special dinner with close friends and family this evening.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

Take advantage of upbeat planetary influences. This is a day to relax and enjoy life to the fullest. At 6:21 a.m. the Cancer moon becomes inactive until 10:03 a.m., when it enters playful Leo. Gather with friends and family; get back in the swing of favorite sports or hobbies. Rest and recharge your batteries.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

A lunar opposition to Neptune can make for a slow start to this day. People may be sleepy, careless, forgetful. Stop, look and listen. Because a new moon culminates on the twenty-fifth and the planet Mars turns direct on the twenty-seventh, this is a week to get your ducks in line. Clean out, reorganize and prepare to initiate new ventures next week. A Leo moon today prompts you to take extra time out for fun and games.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23

Get an early start to this day. Planetary influences in the morning are the best for getting things done. The sun enters Libra at 6:47 a.m., remaining there until October 23. The moon continues to travel in Leo, generating an optimistic mood. However, at 3:33 p.m. the moon becomes inactive, when it opposes Uranus. At 4:04 p.m. the moon enters Virgo, and opposes Mars at 4:25 p.m. That means that this afternoon can be hectic. Drive defensively; don't take risks. An alignment of Venus and Neptune offers an opportunity to kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24

The next couple of days may be stressful. A positive, peaceful attitude is your ace in the hole. Make light of situations you can't control. Stay busy with practical projects. Tackle jobs you've been putting off, like cleaning out cluttered areas. Get your life in order. The moon travels in meticulous Virgo, active until 9:52 p.m., when it aligns with Pluto. Take quiet time out for yourself; meditate, listen to music, enjoy a nature walk.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

The dark side of a new moon is a time for letting go and clearing the way for new activities. People may be distracted, temperamental, moody. Ready yesterday's advice. Pursue activities that help you to maintain a relaxed, positive outlook. Venus aligns with Saturn at 11:20 a.m. The Virgo moon continues inactive travel until 6:49 p.m., when it enters Libra. The new moon culminates at 11:09 p.m., 3-degrees Libra.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26

Gear up for a busy day. The moon continues its travel in Libra, forming four major alignments to planets. There is one rough spot in effect between 1:17-4:17 p.m., when the moon aligns with Saturn. Keep it light and go with the flow of things. The planet Mars takes the spotlight today, because Mars prepares to turn direct early tomorrow morning. This combination may spark romantic fireworks this evening.

School officials 'sea' red over charter school

Institution to have a maritime theme

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With plans for a curriculum centered around a maritime theme — which includes working closely with the Hull Lifesaving Museum, and a beautiful location on the water, founders of the South Shore Maritime Academy Charter School have many ideas for how their school will be run.

Serving the towns of Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, and Scituate, the SSMACS would enroll students in grades 10 to 12.

While most high schools start at grade nine, the SSMACS would begin in grade 10 to allow students to participate in a "typical" first year of high school, said school spokesman Robert White, a science teacher at Hanover High School and former submarine nuclear power plant operator in the United States Navy.

Typically, students go through "a lot of changes during ninth grade," and by experiencing a typical year in high school, they would be able to make a more informed decision as to whether it is in their best interest to transfer, he said.

Slated to open in the fall of 2005 in Cohasset, due to the town's seaside location and proximity to the other towns the school would draw from, the first stages of the application process have already caused alarm, although the state Department of Education (DOE) has yet to give the school the go-ahead.

The South Shore Maritime Academy Charter School hopes to 'reel-in' those students who did not succeed in the freshman program at their regular school.

Members of the Cohasset School Committee were shocked when they learned of the proposed school for the first time earlier this month and had questions not answered in the prospectus (a detailed outline for the proposed school) that they say are critical to the town. The Cohasset School Committee is also concerned about the school's impact on the budget.

If the DOE decides the first proposal looks promising, it may extend the invitation to the school to apply for a charter.

"It's very early in the process," said DOE spokeswoman Kimberly Beck, adding

But will trains really roll in '06?

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

After a seven-month delay and a full review, the MBTA is resuming construction of the 17-mile Greenbush commuter rail line through Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

Gov. Mitt Romney signed off on the decision Monday, and members of the MBTA Board of Directors, responding to a telephone poll, unanimously agreed to resume the $479 million project.

"For proponents of Greenbush, this is certainly good news. But, as a wise man once said, it's not over till it's over."
— Rep. Frank Hynes, Greenbush proponent

Trains are due to roll in the spring of 2006, with the immediate commencement of construction, according to MBTA General Manager Michael Mulhern. Construction of a tunnel underneath Hingham center will begin next spring.

But is the commuter rail project truly on track this time?

"For proponents of Greenbush, this is certainly good news. But, as a wise man once said, it's not over till it's over," said state Rep. Frank Hynes, a long-time Greenbush supporter.

The Marshfeld Democrat said rail proponents should be "cautiously optimistic" the project is going forward, but noted that Romney's is the fifth administration in 20 years to thoroughly review the project and give it the go ahead.

Greenbush advocates basked in the green glow radiating from Beacon Hill.

Mulhern said he has a "higher degree of confidence" in the project after completing the review process. The design process, which Mulhern said never ceased, is "nearing 100 percent completion," he said.

"We're building a project that's going to last 100 years," Mulhern said during the press conference at the authority's headquarters in Boston. "There is a renewed, if not new, dedication of the place that public transportation plays in our overall policy."

Mulhern and state Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas said the nearly eight-month break was important so they "could look the public in the eye" and defend the project. Douglas Foy, Romney's chief of Commonwealth Development, supported the announcement and said he was "delighted by the decision."

Citing reasons for the continuation, officials said the project fits in with Romney's "smart growth" agenda as a "critical" vehicle of transportation for South Shore residents, and there is no suitable alternative. Grabauskas said the project is also too important to the state's economic development to

Historic homes could qualify for tax break

Non-profit trust spreads the word

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An old tax deduction that could add up to big bucks for certain homeowners is getting some new attention in Cohasset and other towns that have National Register Historic Districts or properties listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The National Architectural Trust — a Washington, DC-based, non-profit organization dedicated to the preservation of historic architecture — is trying to make affected homeowners aware of the benefits of the 1976 Federal Historic Preservation Tax Incentive Program.

"The U.S. government is rewarding you for keeping your house in its current condition," says Bill Moonan, area manager with the National Architectural Trust (NAT). He points out those Cohasset residents who already live in the local Cohasset Common Historic District — which is also on the National Register — are already faced with restrictions about what can be done to the home's exterior.

Lilly Albright strolls with her children along North Main Street near the common. That part of North Main Street is on the National Register of Historic Places.

"Why not gain an added tax saving?" he asked.

With the high values of homes, the tax deduction can be substantial – from about $100,000 to $150,000 on a home valued at $1 million. [If a homeowner were in the 28 percent tax bracket, a $100,000 deduction could add up to a tax break of $28,000].

According to James M. Kearns, president of the NAT, the trust grew out of efforts in Washington, D.C. that helped more than 250 homeowners in that area voluntarily preserve their historic homes while receiving a significant reduction in their income taxes. The Trust was established so the tax incentive program could be made available to property

Water board looks to protect Lily Pond

Wants to buy nearby land

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With land maps and handouts, Water Commission Chairman John McNabb came before the Community Preservation Committee to ask for its help in acquiring property next to Lily Pond and other valuable water sources in the Lily Pond area.

With maps depicting land that has not been developed and has no apparent ownership, McNabb pointed out parcels along Lily Pond, Peppermint Brook, and Brass Kettle Brook, adding that buying the property would ensure the safety and quality of the town's drinking water.

"The best prevention is no development to protect the water supply," McNabb said, adding that new developments not only contribute to pollution from their sewers, but from water runoff as well. Storm water runs down the sides of houses and into the streets, picking up pollutants as it travels, eventually flowing into water bodies. Without developments, the chances of pollution are much less, he explained.

"The best prevention is no development to protect the water supply."
— John McNabb, Water Commission

McNabb made his presentation to the CPC at its open forum held Sept. 15, which allowed members from the community to share ideas and ask questions. The meeting was also a chance for anyone with an idea for projects which fall under the umbrella of what the CPC can fund, to come forward and give an informal presentation. Each year, the CPC must spend or bank a minimum of 10 percent of its annual revenue on each of three specific areas, which includes open space, affordable housing, and historic preservation.

Forums to focus on Straits Pond ecology

Through a series of public forums on the "Ecology of Straits Pond: A System Out of Balance," the Straits Pond Watershed Association plans to inform the public on management alternatives and issues for Straits Pond; solicit sufficient community input to develop a working consensus on a management plan; and present the results to the appropriate officials in Cohasset and Hull by December, 2003.

The forums will be held from 7-9 p.m. on Wednesdays.

• Oct. 8 — an introduction and background by focusing on history and specific sites to be discussed in later forums.

• Oct. 15 — "What is causing the problems and ways to improve the situation" at the Louis B. Costa (Selectmen's Room) at the Hull Town Hall, 245 Atlantic Ave, Hull.

Correction is noted

A story in last week's Mariner should have said George Roukounakis has owned the gas station in the village for 31 years since 1972, not 1982 as was reported.

The Mariner regrets the error.

3 Jerusalem Lane decision is appealed

A group of neighbors to 3 Jerusalem Lane have appealed to Land Court, the recent Zoning Board of Appeals decision to issue a special permit for the single-family home constructed by Phil Ayer on a preexisting non-conforming lot.

The neighbors, who include Thomas Fallon and Kriste Henricksen of 2 Jerusalem Lane; Stephen Jacob and Patricia Davis-Jacob, 15 Jerusalem Lane; and Steven and Sharon Daly of 322 Jerusalem Road, say the ZBA failed to apply proper criteria and standards when determining whether the new structure would be "substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood" [the standard in the bylaw for granting zoning relief] than the original house, which Ayer razed.

The neighbors say the ZBA refused to consider the aesthetics of the project, including the impact on their views and other adverse impacts on the neighborhood.

However, the ZBA in its decision stated "there is little question the Ayers' new home is substantially larger and more visibly obviously on this site, it is also arguably larger than surrounding home son Jerusalem Lane. But larger is not necessarily 'more detrimental to the neighborhood.'"

Budget balancing

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting will be asked to transfer $234,000 from free cash (surplus revenue) to balance the fiscal year 2004 budget approved at last spring's annual Town Meeting.

The transfer will cover the $106,000 snow and ice deficit from last winter and $128,000 in additional cuts to local aid from the state.

County tax bill

Cohasset has to make two payments of $43,539 to Norfolk County, the first by Nov. 1 and the second by May 1, 2004 for a total of fiscal year 2004 bill of $87,078. The county-wide tax levy is $4,351,795.

Town union contracts to expire on June 30

Town Manager Mark Haddad has notified the Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Local 2804; the International Brotherhood of Police Officers (Cohasset Police Association Local 641); the Cohasset Library Union (SEIU Local 888); and the Konohasset Clerical Association that their collection bargaining agreements with the Town of Cohasset are due of expire on June 30.

"I am writing to inform you the Town wishes to commence negotiations on a new agreement," Haddad wrote to each union representative.

Paul Bilodeau is president of the firefighters union; Sgt. William Quigley is interim president of the police union; Susan Chase represents the library union and Nancy Noonan represents the clerical union.

Multi-dwelling unit is defined

Attorney John Richard Hucksam, Jr., of Deutsch Williams, the firm the town contracts with as Town Counsel, has defined "multi-dwelling units" as buildings containing three or more dwelling units. Hucksam was responding to a request from Assessor Mary Quill concerning the total number of dwelling units in town. Her question related to the Senior Multi-Family Residence Overly District Bylaw, approved at Town Meeting, that states the total number of multi-family dwelling units of any kind erected in town shall not exceed 20 percent of the dwelling units in town.

Detached single-family homes that include an accessory dwelling unit (apartment) are not considered multi-dwelling units, Hucksam said.

Window replacement

The Center for Student Coastal Research has asked the Community Preservation Committee for reimbursement of $7,775 for window replacement at the former Hagerty House off Parker Avenue, where the center is located. Town Meeting voters last spring approved $36,000 in Community Preservation Funds for the $100,000 renovation project.

Crosswalk at library

Selectmen have agreed with James Campbell, 44 Ripley Road, that a crosswalk is needed at the parking lot entrance to the library.

Going toward the village, the sidewalk on the library side of Ripley Road only extends as far as the parking lot entrance to the library. "After this point, you must cross to the other side of Ripley to use the sidewalk the rest of the way to town," Campbell stated in his letter. Therefore, pedestrians choose this point to cross back and forth across Ripley Road to get to and from the library, he said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the crosswalk would be installed at the existing curb cut on Ripley Road by the library's front door.

"We appreciate Mr. Campbell for bringing this matter to our attention," Haddad said, adding the town would make sure the crossing meets all handicap-access rules and regulations.

Cohasset Housing Authority meeting goes up in smoke

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Residents of the Harborview apartments insist second-hand smoke is not an issue at the senior housing complex, but is rather a problem with one tenant voicing complaints about a situation that doesn't exist.

Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo met with the Cohasset Housing Authority at the complex off Elm Street prepared to offer support for what he had been told was a situation in need of a remedy, but came to find the majority of residents present at the meeting said there wasn't a problem.

But Housing Authority Chairman Ann C. Barrett had to leave before the meeting began, when she found out her apartment had caught fire, calling her away from her board member duties to deal with smoke of a different nature. No one was injured in the fire and officials say the cause may have been a toaster oven.

In the meantime, Bobo said the health board has the resources to help fight second-hand smoke.

Second-hand smoke, "is an important issue to the Board of Health, and we think you're doing the best you can with that," said Bobo, offering to work with the Housing Authority to purchase filters or fans to help waft smoke out of apartments before it can filter through walls into other apartments, or help with any other problem, not specifically dealing with second-hand smoke.

"I think that's a great offer," said authority board member Taffy Nothnagle.

Bobo said the health board has conducted evaluations of the housing units and could come to no major conclusions that there is a real problem with the walls being porous, which would allow smoke to travel to other apartments where residents do not smoke. But he said adjustments could be made for those who insist there is a problem.

Concern over the issue began when Karen Ford, 575 Jerusalem Road, got the ball rolling, so to speak, at Harborview with a letter to the editor in the Aug. 14 Cohasset Mariner. Ford stated she was deeply concerned about a friend who lives in Harborview and hopes "there could be a way the state could make a law that would provide for a section, separate from the rest," so her friend, who has chronic health challenges aggravated by cigarette smoke, wouldn't have to live with it.

"We're here to stand behind the housing authority."
— Carole Ann Goulart, Harborview resident

After reading the letter, Bobo said the board became concerned about the problem, and spoke with the housing authority, agreeing to address the issue on Sept. 23.

Bobo said he wanted to hear the concerns of the people who live in the affected area.

"There are 64 units and three people smoke, and there are no complaints except one building, and we all know who that is," said tenant Barbara Jones, who added that there should be no more discussion about the matter because there is no problem with second-hand smoke.

Ford came forward, introducing herself as the woman who wrote to the paper, and said she felt badly the situation "has come to this."

Nancy Crough, the woman whom the complaint is focused on, came forward as well, to state her side of the story. She said while she does smoke, she never smokes in her apartment. She said on two occasions, she has been approached in a friendly way by the woman who made the complaint, asking her about smoke Crough insists isn't there. Crough went on to say she either travels down by the community room or up to a friend's patio to smoke, so as not to leave the smell lingering by her front door.

Crough said she has never smoked in her own home, by choice, no matter where she's lived, and going outside is something she has been accustomed to doing. However, the fact that she is continually being asked to stop smoking is causing more grief than anything.

"I'm sorry you don't believe me, but I'm not smoking in my apartment," she said.

Ford said she was sorry Crough leaves her home to smoke, adding she thinks there should be apartments where those who wish can "smoke their heads off," but the non-smokers wouldn't have to be subjected to it.

"I don't understand why you wouldn't want that," she said.

But Housing Authority Director Marilyn LeBlanc has explained many times, and was reiterated by many tenants at the meeting, that the problem with designating non-smoking housing is, when a vacancy opens in an apartment, it has to be filled. If a prospective tenant is told they cannot move in because they are a smoker, it can be considered discrimination.

"Unfortunately, you didn't know both sides of the story when you wrote your letter," said authority member John Muncey.

Ironically, while the discussion was taking place, firefighters kept coming in and out of the building as a result of the fire which had broken out at Barrett's apartment. Witnesses said heavy, black smoke poured out her kitchen window after firefighters broke it open to put out the blaze.

"We had a fire tonight," said tenant Carole Ann Goulart, who lives in the same building as Barrett. She said even with the heavy black smoke of an actual fire, there was no smoke in the hallways. Even if Crough had ever smoked in her apartment, if the smoke of an actual fire couldn't get into neighbor's homes, the smoke from a cigarette wouldn't, she said.

"We're here to stand behind the housing authority," said Goulart, adding she feels the housing authority has done more than enough to help appease the tenant who complained.

Resident Fred Bruce came to Crough's defense and said, "Nancy's been asked to move by the offended woman," adding that while he does not smoke, if he decided tomorrow that he wanted to, "No one has a right to tell me I can't smoke in my own home."

No one was injured as a result of the fire and Barrett spent the night at her sister's house. Repairs were set to begin yesterday morning on her kitchen window. The fire was contained to the kitchen.

Bobo said if there isn't an issue that needs to be addressed, "We'll forget about it," but the offer still stands if they need any help with any problems in the future.

"You guys do a great job down here and I think the town should recognize that," he said.

School board interviews tonight

Five vie for an open seat

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Selectmen and the four remaining members of the School Committee will meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight (Sept. 25) in the selectmen's office to fill the vacancy created when Jane Pescatore stepped down in August.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the combined board would make its decision tonight. A simple majority vote is needed.

The interviews would be conducted in a forum where all candidates would be present at the same time and can answer questions, McMorris said, as opposed to having them come in one at a time.

The candidates are:

- Betsy Connolly of Lily Pond Lane, who is a former member of the School Committee and has worked in the education field for 30 years.
- Adrienne MacCarthy of Doane Street, who is currently president of the PSO and has served on the School Building/Facilities Committee for seven years.
- Scott O'Grady of Sohier Street, who is the father of three children enrolled in Cohasset schools and has taught in the Weymouth and Plymouth public schools.
- Rick Shea of Margin St., who served on the School Committee from April 1995-April 1998; he also served on the Alumni Field Building Committee and as head of the Cohasset Education Foundation.
- Rory Winters, of Forest Avenue, who is a lifelong Cohasset resident and has experience in public administration.

Pescatore stepped down to accept employment with the school department.

Whoever is chosen will serve until the April Town Election. At that time three School Committee seats will be up for grabs, two for three-year terms and one to fill the remaining year on Pescatore's term. Any of the candidates can run for any of the three positions, as can the incumbents Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo, who could seek reelection. Other interested residents can also seek election to the School Committee or other town boards. Nomination papers become available in January.

Man dies from fall

At 2:35 p.m. yesterday (Wed., Sept. 24), Cohasset police received a 9-1-1 call from 552 Jerusalem Road reporting that a painting contractor had just fallen off the roof.

Cohasset police, fire and rescue personnel were immediately dispatched. The first police officer on scene reported that there was a 37-year-old male unconscious on the ground, in grave condition. Cohasset fire-rescue arrived and took over treatment of the male. Cohasset ambulance transported him to South Shore Hospital.

The man, who fell about 50 feet, was pronounced dead on arrival at the South Shore Hospital emergency room, Sgt. William Quigley said.

Police said the man was a Scituate resident but were withholding his name pending notification of next of kin. The name of the painting company was also being withheld yesterday.

The scene of the fall was being treated as a crime scene, Quigley said yesterday afternoon. Cohasset police detectives, State Police and federal OSHA (Occupational, Safety and Health Administration) agents were still on the scene, collecting physical evidence and taking statements as the Mariner went to press yesterday.

MBTA: median barriers are needed at crossings

Regardless of quad-gate issue

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Until recently, it was believed that using four-quad gates to stop traffic when a train is coming would eliminate the need for median barriers. Towns affected by Greenbush restoration say they are unsightly and could negatively impact historic neighborhoods.

Hingham, Weymouth, Scituate, and Cohasset are all pushing for four-quad gates, due in large part to safety concerns. However, at a meeting hosted by Hingham Monday with the MBTA, the Army Corps of Engineers — the lead federal agency overseeing the project — and representatives from Hingham, Cohasset, Weymouth, and Scituate, MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan delivered the news that the transit authority believes median barriers are necessary regardless of whether two- or four-quad gates are installed. Medians are curbed traffic islands, about 60 to 100 feet long, which keep traffic in its appropriate lanes, making it more difficult to swerve around the gates.

"The safest route is to eliminate grade crossings," Brennan said. But since it's not possible to do away with all of them, the MBTA has found ways to eliminate 20 of the original 43 grade crossings.

Hingham's mitigation agreement with the MBTA calls for four-quad gates, and the town is doing everything within its power to ensure that promise is kept.

The towns want four-quad gates that employ four arms to stop traffic. The MBTA, on the other hand, is pushing for standard crossings with median barriers and in some cases, traffic channeling delineators. Sidewalk gates will be installed either way as well as flashing warning signals.

"Medians are safer because they are a physical impediment, stopping cars from crossing the road where we don't want cars to cross."
— Anna Barry, MBTA Director of Railroad Operations

Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan noted that no funds have been allocated in the MBTA budget for four-quad gates. "That indicates a closed mind," he said. "The public has put their trust in us [to ensure appropriate safety measures will be taken]."

In a June letter to MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan, the ACE, listed a number of issues which still need to be addressed. Those include one related to the Section 106 review process concerning impacts on historic resources and another with regard to the use of four-quadrant gates, which are deemed by many to be safer than two-quad gates because they block both lanes in each direction at grade crossings. Two-quad gates block only the right lanes and are often combined with median barriers to prevent motorists from cutting around the gate. The MBTA claims there's insufficient data showing that four-quad gates are more effective, although installing them sometime in the future wasn't ruled out.

"Public awareness plays a major role in avoiding incidents," said MBTA Consultant Eric Fleming.

Because Greenbush is a whistle-free corridor – meaning whistles would only be sounded for emergencies – standard grade treatment needs medians to prevent impatient motorists from skirting around a closed gate to beat an oncoming train. But now the MBTA claims median barriers will be part of either plan.

"Medians are safer because they are a physical impediment, stopping cars from crossing the road where we don't want cars to cross," said MBTA Director of Railroad Operations Anna Barry. "Four-quad gates can also cut off escape routes for cars trapped between the gates."

Al Goff, Director of Operations and Systems Engineering for the MBTA noted that a number of safety measures are being taken by the MBTA, including better street markings, medians, new LED lights, and louder warning bells. "But we can't stop people from being foolish," he said.

Most of the grade crossings are now at the 90 percent design level, but discussions continue between the MBTA and affected towns to minimize adverse impacts.

For example, the Rocky Lane, Cohasset, crossing is being replaced with a bridge to avoid blocking three historic property driveways. Also, the Spring Street crossing in Cohasset is being relocated. The Country Way intersection in North Scituate has been refined to avoid blocking driveways and other impacts.

Scituate is requesting four-quad gates near the fire station on First Parish Road, near a store in the Egypt section of town which attracts many children, and in the North Scituate business district. "Some of the issues have already been resolved," said former Scituate Selectman Susan Phippen.

The towns have 14 days from Sept 22 to submit written comments to the MBTA.

Corridor study urged on grade crossing treatment

Would look at each situation

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

A consultant representing towns affected by Greenbush restoration is recommending that a "corridor study" be undertaken to determine what kind of treatment is best for grade crossings along the rail line on a case by case basis.

Railroad Safety Consultant and former Federal Railway Administration official James Sottile, who expressed a willingness to participate in such a study, said he's seen a number of grade crossings in Hingham where four-quad gates would enhance safety. He observed that they were used at the turn of the century in Hingham Square, pointing to a wall mural in Town Hall depicting such a scene during a recent meeting of the MBTA, Army Corps of Engineers, and representatives from towns affected by Greenbush restoration.

Hingham, Scituate, Cohasset, and Weymouth are pushing for four-quad gates, but the MBTA wants to install two-quad gates instead. The MBTA is also calling for median barriers regardless of which treatment is ultimately used.

"We're all trying to find reasonable solutions. There's no one design that fits all grade crossings," said Hingham Selectman Melissa Tully. We need to look at the safety of motorized vehicles as well as the number of children who will be walking in the area of the tracks, particularly near South Shore Country Club."

Tully noted that two-quad gates create a gap which "allows pedestrians and vehicles to pass through, creating an unsafe situation. Our agreement with the MBTA calls for four-quad gates, none of which have been included in any of the design plans. Statistics show that four-quad gates help prevent accidents."

Such a study, which would likely involve traffic engineers and other experts, would take about three months. The cost is as yet undetermined. Before the Army Corps of Engineers (the lead federal agency overseeing the project) issues a permit allowing the project to move forward, the agency must be satisfied that all remaining issues have been resolved, including ones revolving around public safety at grade crossings.

"There's no one design that fits all grade crossings.
— Hingham Selectman Melissa Tully

"If such a study is requested or commissioned by the Corps, it's important that we have local input and that it's not a unilateral determination made by the MBTA, which has been the case so far with these types of decisions," said Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan said. "The form such an analysis would take remains to be seen."

MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan objected to the corridor study. "We think median barriers are the safest way to go (see related story), and this takes us back a step," he said. "It's a matter of balancing all the issues. Public safety is our ultimate responsibility."

Hingham Fire Chief William Johnson and Police Chief Steven Carlson, however, think median barriers pose a threat to public safety. "Median barriers prevent vehicles from creating an open corridor during emergencies," Johnson said. "Cars freeze in place when they hear a siren." The Fire Department responds to about 3,600 calls a year. The Police Department makes about 14,000 service calls annually.

Randy Dickinson of the Federal Railway Administration (FRA) dashed the hopes of those who thought the agency might play a more active role in resolving the four-quad issue. "The FRA doesn't have the authority. State agencies are responsible for making those decisions," he said. Neither does the FRA have the authority to require a corridor review, although Dickinson said the FRA could participate in an ad hoc fashion if asked to do so.

Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad supports a corridor study. "We're requesting that median barriers be eliminated at the Beechwood and Pleasant street crossings due to public safety issues," he said.

Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln also opposes the use of median barriers. "They would restrict access to a residential building and delay access to several businesses at the Pleasant Street crossing in addition to having an impact on bringing emergency incidents to a successful conclusion," he said.

Weymouth's Director of Planning James Clark said medians would create problems at four intersections, including Unicorn Avenue and Commercial Street, and impact some historic homes and private driveways.

There are also other anticipated impacts. "Median barriers will have a negative aesthetic and visual impact," said Preservation Consultant Minxie Fannin. "The historic districts will be very different places than they are now."

Some members of the Local 133 Laborers Union showed up before the meeting holding "Greenbush on Track" signs in front of Town Hall.

Among them was Bob Oliver of Rockland, who delivered the message that "we want the jobs and an easier commute for people working in Boston. I think support for the project has always been there, but supporters are more vocal now."

Several permits could still be Greenbush hurdle

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Move over MBTA and AfTA to make room for FONSI, an acronym that is sure to come to the forefront as the Greenbush process unfolds in the months ahead.

FONSI – or Finding of No Significant Impact – is a standard the Army Corps of Engineers, a federal agency, will use in determining whether to issue what is essentially the "building permit" for the Greenbush project.

It's the Army Corps' independent oversight that Greenbush critic John Bewick, president of Advocated for Transportation Alternatives, dubbed AfTA, sees still as a hurdle for the 17.7-mile train project that got the go-ahead from the Romney administration this week.

"It's not a done deal. The project is still not permitted," Bewick said. "It needs variances from the state wetlands act from the Department of Environmental Protection and a wetlands permit from the Army Corps of Engineers."

Bewick, who is a former state Secretary of Environmental Affairs, said he thinks the permit issues are significant and in addition to wetlands — involve flood, water supply, archeological issues, and safety and aesthetic issues surrounding the use of four-quad gates.

AfTA will continue to fight the train on several fronts including "process issues" regarding how much say the local conservation commissions in the affected towns should have over the project. There is also a question of legal interpretation over whether the "takings" [killing] of certain species is permitted under the Endangered Species Act.

The Army Corps must also insure the MBTA lives up to historic preservation issues detailed in the Section 106 agreement with the towns that it oversaw.

Selectman Melissa Tully said there are difficult issues ahead for Greenbush.

"One of the more difficult issues is that of four quadrant gates," she said. "The five towns met with the Army Corps of Engineers and the MBTA on Monday for a consultation on this issue.

"Even though the grade crossing treatments have not been determined at this point, the MBTA has chosen not to include any costs for four quadrant gates in their $479 million estimate," Tully said. "They have a duty to the public to be more honest about the potential costs of this project.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, a Greenbush critic, said he will do all he can to insure the MBTA lives up to its agreements with the towns.

"I will fight tooth and nail against any scaling back of mitigation," he said.

All aboard: green light for Greenbush abandon. And project overseers have already incurred $100 million in non-recoverable costs, he said.

"We are a go for Greenbush," said State Transportation Office spokesman Jon Carlisle following Governor Romney's announcement The decision was unanimous one by the MBTA Board, a first in the controversial project's long history, he said.

"The MBTA board as well as the governor have a degree of comfort with the project after reviewing it in an exhaustive fashion," said Carlisle. The decision took into consideration the legal commitment made in conjunction with the central artery to build the Greenbush line, as well as the more than $100 million in costs already invested in the project, he said.

When the moratorium halted work on the rail line in February, Carlisle noted transportation planners continued to man the Weymouth Landing office during the hiatus.

"Work should start up again in the next few weeks," said Carlisle. "By the springtime, you can expect to see about 100 working on the corridor, 150 by the next summer."

Carlisle said revenue service on the Greenbush line should begin in the first half of 2006.

Local officials react to decision

Weymouth Mayor David Madden said he was very pleased the line is going forward.

"Our hope is that Greenbush will not only provide better transportation for the South Shore, but will also reinforce the village concept in Weymouth," Madden said.

James Casey, chairman of the Braintree Greenbush Mitigation Committee, echoed Madden's enthusiasm.

"It's good to see that the project has finally gotten underway. It's been a long time coming. I think that over the long term, the line will be beneficial to the Braintree community as well as the South Shore."

"I think that it's going to change the town, hopefully for the better," said Timothy Egan, chairman of the Braintree Board of Selectmen.

Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is glad the decision has been made.

"Now the selectmen can move forward with the downtown revitalization issues," said Haddad. The MBTA mitigation agreement with Cohasset includes redoing the town parking lot, which is key to Cohasset's village revitalization project.

Martha Gjesteby, a former Cohasset selectman and member of the Citizens Advisory Committee on the train, has been involved with Greenbush since 1984.

"We can't please everyone," she said about opponents and those who live along the tracks. "But it is a decision that is long overdue and the train will be an economic boon to the South Shore."

Hingham Selectman Melissa Tully said she was surprised by the governor's decision.

"I am surprised that Gov. Romney was willing to commit to going forward with the project given the unknown costs," she said. "The MBTA cannot start construction until it receives a permit from the Army Corps of Engineers. There are several unresolved issues that the Army Corps, the MBTA and the five towns are still working on."

Ron Zoolek, president and CEO of the 2,300-member business-backed South Shore Chamber of Commerce, said the Greenbush battle has been waged for 18 years. The project has overcome numerous environmental, court and financial challenges, he said.

"I didn't expect a different result but I feared one," Zoolek said Monday afternoon. "I'm cautiously optimistic. I'm happy about the result. However, I would be the first to point out I will really be happy when I'm riding on the first train. We've been here before."

The train represents a new option to address the South Shore's clogged arteries, he said.

"It's a great place to live and play but you just can't afford to get there from here," said Zoolek. "We have something that's needed for the people that live here and have to travel into the city and spots along the way."

While Hynes acknowledged the conflicting feelings about Greenbush, he remains optimistic that he'll see the day he'll hop on the train in Marshfield and zip into Boston.

"This has been such a controversial issue on the South Shore," said Hynes. "It has even split families in some instances."

Still, Hynes points out the Romney's approval for Greenbush has significance in that his is a brand new administration which had no previous ties to the project.

"This administration knew the project was controversial and costly," Hynes said.

Before taking it on as a priority, Romney and his advisors put it on hold to review it thoroughly, recognizing the state has limited financial resources, he said. Hynes also noted that many of Romney's advisors were skeptical the project could stand up to the scrutiny of the new administration.

Yet after a review that took into careful consideration all the financial, transportation and legal issues, it was a unanimous decision that this project is the right thing to do, said Hynes, who was pleased by the announcement.

"Having listened to people on both sides of the issue, I've concluded that our children would never forgive us if we didn't follow through on this project. This will be our last opportunity to build this thing," Hynes said.

Hynes said he is grateful to rail opponents who have pointed out that there are additional transportation alternatives the region requires. "We need enhanced boat transit, rapid transit and even bus service," he said.

The project's costs will be covered by the MBTA, which is in the midst of its second major fare hike in three years. While the authority's capital budget is tight and Greenbush critics say the rail line's costs outweigh its benefits, T officials say they can afford to restore the old line.

The MBTA, which is struggling with declining ridership and expanding service commitments, receives revenues from fares, community assessments and a 20 percent share of the state sales tax.

Opponents vow last-ditch fight

Greenbush opponents are not about to lie down and let the train roll over them.

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who represents many of the towns affected by Greenbush, had hoped for a different outcome.

"While I appreciate the fact that Governor Romney made time to personally review this project, and didn't just rubber stamp the irresponsible actions of previous administrations, he made an easy decision instead of a courageous decision," Hedlund said in a statement.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said he was disappointed.

"I have always felt it was a bad decision for the people in the district and the taxpayers of Massachusetts when there are alternatives that can do the job for far less money."

John Bewick, president of anti-Greenbush AFTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives), threw a harsher light on Romney's choice.

"This is a fiscally irresponsible decision by Governor Romney," Bewick said. "The alternative of enhancing the existing system of boats, buses, and trains would save the Commonwealth hundreds of millions of dollars at a time when the MBTA is so fiscally strapped that it is seeking a fare increase, in part to pay for Greenbush."

This fare will cost the MBTA millions of riders, Bewick said..

"The alternatives to Greenbush would add more new riders than Greenbush. The alternatives take advantage of private sector funding of boats and buses and federal funding of parking at the docks to save taxpayer dollars. The alternatives can be implemented in the next year or two without significant impacts to the communities involved," Bewick said.

He stressed that Greenbush is "far from a done deal."

"There are many permits still to be issued that can be challenged," Bewick said. "It could take years to get those permits and the conditions imposed by those permits could easily cause project costs to rise significantly. This is now Romney's project for better or worse. When MBTA fares go up and nothing is built for years, we know who to blame."

Greenbush officials, however, believe they have dealt with the issue of alternative transportation and have a legal decision to back it up.

No alternative would deliver a greater reduction in vehicle miles traveled per day than the reduction of 76,000 trips per day offered by Greenbush, transportation officials claimed in a statement released Monday afternoon. A state Department of Environmental Protection Administrative law judge was quoted in the release debunking claims by Greenbush opponents that better transportation alternatives exist.

Judge Mark L. Silverstein said there was no way to address hypothetical alternative transportation scenarios because these scenarios were "unfettered by any real-world constraints."

"It allows proponents (of alternative transportation) to spend hypothetically an unlimited amount of public money, apply an unlimited amount of hypothetical work and resources, propose the hypothetical construction and improvement of facilities at any imaginable location, and hypothetically reorient the commuting and social habits of an unlimited number of people. Under this boundless model, nothing is impossible and therefore no alternatives to the Greenbush line could be eliminated," Silverstein stated in his Sept. 9, 2003 finding.

Yet, South Shore opponents have not given up hope that the project will be killed and are disappointed in the governor and the decision to move forward.

"We will continue to fight," said Scituate resident Dottie Leach. "We will not give up. This is going to have a terrible impact on the people who live by the tracks. We're going to have serious injuries."

Leach said pollution, increased traffic in particular locations, and the close proximity of houses to the rail line will lead to bigger problems for abutters than the MBTA realizes.

Hundreds of school buses will cross the tracks every day, businesses will need to relocate, and emissions from the trains will be harmful to those who live along the line, she said.

"This is a terrible tragedy for the town and for the South Shore," Leach said.

School officials 'sea' red over charter school

if the school is to be invited to apply for a charter, it would most likely be notified within the next few weeks, as applications for charters are due in November. Schools find out if they have been granted their charters in February. Once a decision on a charter is made, it is final and cannot be appealed. However, if a school is denied a charter, it is allowed to apply again the following year.

In addition to White, founders of the SSMACS include Janice Comeau Anderson, a health educator and health coordinator at Hanover High School; Alesha Delgiacco, a science teacher at Hanover High School; Edward McCabe, a founder of the Hull Lifesaving Museum, who currently works as director of its maritime programs; and Hull Lifesaving Museum Executive Director Lory Newmyer, who has also served as a board member of the Montessori Community School in Scituate.

"We hope to target students who may not have 'fit-in' at their traditional high school," the prospectus states. "We believe that it is important for students to try the conventional methods of schooling, hence our 10th-grade matriculation. However, in many cases, students fall between the cracks and end up taking lower level courses simply because of an inability on the part of their schools to understand their individual needs.

"SSMAC hopes to 'reel-in' those students who, for whatever reason, did not succeed in their freshman program at their intended high school."

White also said the SSMACS would cater to students that "perhaps learn a little better by doing," by providing more hands-on activities than would be typical at a regular high school.

Charter schools have gained a reputation for taking much needed funds from school budgets that are already spread extremely thin. The tuition, based on a state formula, "follows" the student from his or her town to the charter school. In Cohasset, this means for every student attending a charter school, the town must pay upwards of $7,000.

The SSMACS founders estimates the school will have 32 students in grade 10 at its opening, which could average around four or five children from each of the seven towns. If five students from Cohasset choose to attend the SSMACS, the town would pay upwards of $35,000 in the first year alone, because the school estimates enrollment will increase to 64 in year two and 96 in year three. Currently, the town is paying roughly $132,000 to send students to the South Shore Charter School in Hull.

In addition to paying for tuition, towns would also be required to provide transportation for those children who qualify under the town's transportation policy.

- School District review of applications December 2003-January 2004
- Public hearings on final application: December 2003-January 2004
- Interviews with applicants: January 2004
- Commissioner makes recommendations to Board of Education: February 2004
- Board of Education votes to grant charters February 2004

School Committee members were also concerned about where the school would be located From the sounds of the plans, they could only surmise the school will need to be located on the water to allow for the hands-on activities, but space is very limited along Cohasset's coast.

In addition, the former Hagerty House on Parker Avenue has recently been transformed to serve as a coastal research center for students, which has been doing the kind of work outlined in the prospectus. Committee members worry the work being done at the Center for Student Coastal Research could be hampered by studies done at the proposed school. Students have been working hard to build upon their research year after year, to provide the town with much needed water quality studies. Their programs are funded by a grant and therefore do not cost the town any money.

However, White said he had been under the impression the CSCR held programs for junior high school age students, and said the proposed school would be willing to work together with the CSCR and their high school level students on maritime research.

Committee members also questioned the need for the school, noting Hull's South Shore Charter School is not mentioned at all in the SSMACS prospectus.

"It's a different type of school," said White, because the SSMACS is strictly for high school students rather than the SSCS which serves grades K-12.

In the future, White said he would like to meet with the superintendents in the surrounding districts to "find out how we can better serve them."

Supt. Edward Malvey said he will meet with other superintendents for the specific purpose of discussing the charter school in the near future.

However, no matter what position superintendents in the area take, their opinion would not be the deciding factor on whether the school is approved. Beck said the DOE is the only one that can reject an application and there is nothing a school system or town can do to prevent a charter school from coming.

While there is still much planning to be done before a school could be put into place, White said he looks forward to the future and "forming relationships" in the community.

About charter schools

According to the state Department of Education, charter schools are public schools which operate independently from any school committee, under a five-year agreement, or charter, granted by the state Board of Education. The schools can be started by parents, teachers, non-profit organizations, or community leaders. They have the freedom to organize around a core mission, curriculum, theme, or teaching method, and are allowed to control their own budgets, as well as the hiring and firing of teachers and staff. In return, a charter school must attract their own students and produce results within five years, or their charter will be revoked.

Currently, the South Shore Charter School in Hull, which is expected to move to Norwell next year, is the only charter school in the immediate area. There are currently 52 charter schools in the state of Massachusetts, with schools in Plymouth, Hyannis, Brockton, Orleans, Dorchester, and South Boston, to name a few.

Pumpkin patch fundraiser to be held in Wheelwright Park

On the afternoon of Wednesday, Oct. 8, the open field at the entrance to Wheelwright Park will be magically turned into a pumpkin patch. Open daily from Saturday, Oct. 11 through Halloween, Friday, Oct. 31, pumpkins of all shapes and size will be available for purchase, along with gourds, corn stalks, Indian corn, and lots more. All proceeds will benefit the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project (CASP).

CASP is affiliated with the Appalachia Service Project, headquartered in Johnson City, TN. ASP is an interfaith program that sends teens and adults from all over the country to areas of Appalachia, to do badly needed repairs on homes in some of the poorest areas of the United States. This year is the 16th year of the Cohasset program, and the group expects to send 120 teens and 55 adults on the one week trip, planned for late June, making Cohasset the largest participant in the national program. Although the trip is only a week long, fundraising and planning is a year long endeavor.

Overflow parking will be available at the little league field across the street from the park's entrance throughout the sale.

Anyone interested in finding out more about participation in the program can contact the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset at (781) 383-0345, or visit the web site at www.cohassetasp.org. Deadline for applications for the 2004 trip is Wednesday, Oct. 1.

CPC's role defined in community forum

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"Traditionally, as long as the proposal meets the spending criteria, we'll take a look at it."

— Stuart Ivimey, Community Preservation Committee

For Cohasset residents not familiar with the role of the Community Preservation Committee, the Sept. 15 open forum provided the perfect venue to get some answers.

To open the meeting, Chairman Stuart Ivimey explained the purpose of the open format was to allow residents to participate in the discussion, and let the committee know what people in town perceive as the needs for the community. The meeting was also meant to help clear up any questions about what the role of the committee is and what future projects they have in mind.

Ivimey began the meeting by explaining what the CPC can fund, which includes only projects in the three specific areas of open space, affordable housing, and historic preservation. He said there is a sub-category under the open space category that covers recreational lands, which allowed for the restoration of the ball fields.

"All that in mind, we can't build sewers, we can't build sidewalks, we cannot spend money on maintenance," he said, adding that painting a building to help restore it to its true historical colors could be covered by the CPC, but painting Town Hall as a part of its regular upkeep would not.

Under the Community Preservation Act, adopted by the town in 2002, the CPC receives funding for projects from two sources, the real estate tax surcharge (in Cohasset it is 1.5 percent) and some level of matching funds from the state. State funds are derived from a roughly $20 surcharge on all documents filed in the Registry of Deeds, which mostly consists of mortgages and refinancing. The CPC expects the state to provide a 100 percent match of funds this year, and will have definite figures in October.

Each year, 10 percent of the committee's funds are either spent or set aside for a future project, for each of its three areas of influence. All expenditures must be approved by a municipality's legislative branch, which in Cohasset's case is Town Meeting.

"If we don't pick a project, we can carry the funds over," said CPC member Tom Callahan, which allows for much flexibility.

Ivimey added, any project that comes before the CPC needs to have a plan for companion funds to help offset the costs as well as help stretch the CPC funds.

Each year, Ivimey said the CPC receives roughly $430,000 in revenue, of which $224,000 can be spent in any of the three areas, depending on the needs of the town. Recent projects that have come before the CPC, and are still being discussed, are the request for $60,000 for the playground at the new Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum, and a request to help fund the burying of wires in the downtown area, which includes helping incorporate brick into the sidewalks. Peter Roy has also proposed the CPC buy the Mill River Marina for $700,000, but because it was appraised at $300,000 there is still an ongoing discussion with Roy's attorney.

"We haven't taken a position, these are just the ones sitting before us now," Ivimey said, adding that upon further investigation of the proposals, some may or may not qualify for funding by the CPC.

For anyone interested in bringing a project before the CPC, there must first be a proposal sent in writing to the committee. If the idea is thought to be feasible by the committee, a time will be set up for a more formal presentation to be made. Because projects must be approved at the Special Town Meeting, which will be held Nov. 17, the committee recommends proposals be sent in as soon as possible to allow time for them to be looked over and included on the article, should it be necessary. The CPC will announce a formal deadline as the meeting approaches, and Ivimey said, "Traditionally, as long as the proposal meets the spending criteria, we'll take a look at it."

CPC member Al Moore, who is also chairman of the Planning Board, said only those who are truly interested in actively pursuing their projects should come before the CPC. In the past, he said people have sometimes asked for a "large sum of money and want to leave the baby on our doorstep."

"It's not our job to make the process work," Callahan said, adding the CPC is only there to provide the funding, which it will gladly do for the appropriate projects.

well as a selectman, said he thought the idea seemed like a good one, especially because the first draft of the Master Plan looks favorably on such projects.

McNabb said he has spoken briefly with members involved in the development of the Master Plan, but has not made a formal presentation to anyone as of yet.

Because McNabb's presentation was only preliminary, the CPC can ask that he return with a more complete proposal at a later date, which McNabb intends to do.

"I only wanted to acquaint you with the proposal tonight," he said.

Because the town has strict zoning as well as environmental regulations in place specifically for the protection of the water supply, Ivimey wonders why the land would need to be bought to ensure it is not developed on.

"Why do we need to buy this?" asked Ivimey.

"Number one, for protection. Prevention is better than mitigation," McNabb said. He went on to explain that regulations don't fully protect the water supply, they balance what can be changed by limiting the effects of natural expansion in different areas. Regulations serve as a compromise, allowing necessary alterations, such as access roads, but do not fully protect what can be done in the areas surrounding a water supply.

CPC member Al Moore, who is also chairman of the Planning Board, said his area of concern is, there's not a single parcel of land in town of which owners cannot be found. He said some areas may be owned jointly by family members, and titles may need to be sorted out if the land has been passed down over many generations, but owners should not be hard to find. He also mentioned that some land has been split between families to the point where individual parcels are too small to be built on anyway, and to purchase those would be a waste.

McNabb will return with a full proposal for the CPC, and said he hopes the board will help the Water Commission prioritize which parcels are the most important, as well as help split the costs. McNabb said the commission would like to work with any other boards in town that would like to be included in the project, which would not only help split the costs, but would enable the purchase of more land.

LOCKS OF LOVE

Francesca Astino, a fourth-grader at the Deer Hill School, was a bit disappointed when she found out she couldn't have a new hairstyle for the first day of school. She knew it would be worth the wait though, as her haircut was for a good cause! Francesca decided in the spring to let her hair grow until it was long enough to donate to Locks of Love, a non-profit organization, providing hairpieces to disadvantaged children under the age of 18, who have long-term medical hair loss.

On Sept. 11, Samantha at the Charles David Salon in Norwell cut 11 inches off Francesca's hair. Francesca is very happy, both knowing she helped another child, and with her new haircut. She and her family want to thank Samantha and the Charles David Salon for helping them support this great cause.

FALLEN HEROES

Cohasset servicemen killed in Vietnam were honored last weekend, along with others from around the state at a special event at the Massachusetts Vietnam Memorial in Worcester. Katherine Stanton's son-in-law, Rich Hynes of Southborough, himself a US Navy Vietnam Veteran, carried commemorative dog tags for Peter Cogill, Allen Keating, William Laidlaw, John Lyon, Eddie Maree, Dennis Reardon, and Craig Simeone as part of the annual Combat Veterans Motorcycle Ride to the memorial and commemorative ceremony. Participants agreed that local residents who have not yet visited the site will find the trip to the Vietnam Memorial in Worcester to be quite meaningful and worthwhile.

PANCAKE BREAKFAST

The Cohasset Boosters Club will be having its annual pancake breakfast this coming Sunday, Sept. 28 from 8 am till noon at our newly renovated Cohasset Deer Hill School. Cohasset native elected National Chaplain

Thomas Wigmore was elected as National Chaplain for the Sons of the American Legion during their annual convention held in August in St. Louis, Mo. Tom has held numerous national offices for the Sons and was most recently the National Executive Committeeman. He has also been selected to represent the Sons of the American Legion on the American Legion's National Homeless Task Force.

In 1989 Tom reactivated the American Legion Squadron 118 in Cohasset after it had lain dormant for forty-eight years. He has served at Commander of the Squadron ever since. Locally, he has organized the town of Cohasset's hugely successful Memorial Day parade since 1990. He personally places thirteen hundred flags on Cohasset veteran's graves each year. Tom's father Steve who served in the United States Navy is the Commander of the American Legion George H. Mealy post 118 in Cohasset. Tom and his wife Deirdre reside in Hingham.

HARVEST SUPPER

Mmm, Mmm, Mmm, anyone hungry? The annual Harvest Supper, an autumn tradition, will be held at the Beechwood Congregational Church on Church Street. The public is invited to get together for dinner on Thursday evening, Sept. 25 at 6:30. Dinner will include ham, string beans, Harvard beets, mashed potatoes, dessert as well as beverages. A harvest auction will take place following supper. Tickets are $8 for adults and $4 for children. Reserve your tickets by calling 781-383-1298.

Well, Fall has arrived and I know that I for one, am so happy with the weather so far. I definitely think that all of us should be looking at our storm preparations as we head farther into fall and get ready for winter as we have been very fortunate lately in terms of storms but how long can luck hold out? Check all of your supplies and plans to make sure that you will be ready in the event of a storm.

Another note that I think should be passed along is to warn drivers in town to slow down! Children are out there walking, riding bikes and driving scooters as they go to and from school and we need to be sure to keep them safe. We also need to make sure to slow down and stop for the busses at all the appropriate times!

That is all for this week. Make sure to get me all of your news no later than Mondays at noon.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Common ground on Greenbush

While Greenbush proponents break open the champagne, train opponents are regrouping, reorganizing and vowing to fight another day.

We're sure the two groups, both of which have substantial numbers, are never going to see eye-to-eye on what is now a $479 million project.

But we believe those on both sides of the tracks can agree, that when Greenbush comes — and from this week's announcement, it appears the train will indeed be built — they want the best train possible.

That means holding the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's feet to the fire, so to speak, to make sure the agency lives up to its mitigation agreements inked with the towns along the 17-mile corridor.

First and foremost, the MBTA would go a long way in patching up its image with the towns by yielding on the four-quad gates issue. Four-quad gates use four arms to stop traffic as opposed to the two arms used in standard grade crossing treatment.

The MBTA appeared to try and deflate the towns' arguments for the use of the more expensive four-quad gates at the Army Corps of Engineers hearing Monday by saying median barriers would also be required for safety reasons with either type of gate. Until this point, it has been understood the 60-foot long median barriers would only be needed with standard grade crossing treatment. Greenbush is a "whistle-free" corridor, so medians are needed with standard grade crossing treatments as a safety measure to insure impatient motorists don't try to pull around the gate to beat an oncoming train.

But median barriers are unsightly and could actually cause safety problems for fire trucks and police cars trying to pass vehicles in an emergency.

The MBTA's argument doesn't hold up, according to Greenbush critic state Rep. Garrett Bradley.

"I doubt that highly," Bradley says about the need for four-quad gates with median barriers. "Four-quad gates eliminate the need for median barriers."

Hingham Selectman Melissa Tully also makes an excellent point.

"Although the grade crossing treatments have not been determined at this point, the MBTA has chosen not to include any costs for four-quadrant gates in its $479 million estimate," she says. "They have a duty to the public to be more honest about the potential costs of this project."

There is real concern the MBTA will try to keep the cost of Greenbush from going even higher by scaling back on its mitigation commitments.

Rep. Bradley "there will be blood on the floor if that happens."

"I will fight tooth and nail against scaling back any mitigation," Bradley said.

"Maybe they think legislators are asleep at the switch – but there are two legislators in this district that aren't," he said about himself and fellow Greenbush opponent, state Sen. Robert Hedlund.

While this paper has supported Greenbush, we can promise our readers that we stand with our local legislators and town officials in insuring train impacts are mitigated as promised. We will also continue to keep you abreast of train developments, both good and bad, and follow the issue with a sense of fairness and in an unbiased fashion.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stamp out bigotry

TO THE EDITOR:

I wanted to take a moment to respond to Nancy O'Toole's Letter to the Editor dated Sept. 18 regarding Arabic-lettered U.S. postage stamps. Ms. O'Toole seems to be equating a language with a religion, and an entire populace with individual extremists.

Before we call for the removal of Arabic stamps for their religious inference, how about acknowledging the irrefutable relation between stamps of the virgin Mary with Catholicism, or the Menorah with Judaism? U.S. postal stamps are meant to reflect our diverse nation; in addition to recognizing religious freedom, they also document our unique geographical, historical, artistic, and cultural heritage.

It is offensive to imply that all Muslims are "religious zealots" bent on destroying American lives and the U.S. economy. It is important to keep in mind that all religions are capable of being perverted (have we forgotten the Christian Crusades?). The only way we are to truly live in peace is to accept and embrace the plurality of the world we live in.

HEALTH NOTES

The real cost of unhealthy school lunches

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

According to the USDA, the a la carte program sales generated only $913 per year per 1000 students in the 1998-1999 school year. We don't need to create a financial hardship to the school system to ensure that our kids learn healthy eating habits.

Schools that regularly offer students pizza, french fries and high-calorie drinks as alternatives to healthier lunch choices are encouraging them to eat these unhealthy foods not only during school, but after school and at home as well.

According to a recent study of seventh-graders in 16 Minnesota schools researchers asked 598 students what they ate in the past 24 hours. In those schools where students had access to snack vending machines and the school cafeteria offered fried potatoes at lunchtime a la carte programs, the students ate fewer fruits and vegetables and more junk food than in schools where such choices weren't offered. And the students' diets weren't just adversely affected during school, according to the study.

Students who attended schools where fast food was readily available consumed more fat and saturated fat and fewer fruits and vegetables overall than students who weren't exposed to daily offerings of fried potatoes, a la carte programs and vending machine snacks. The study looked not only at food eaten in school, but food they ate outside of school as well.

"These results draw attention to an urgent need to evaluate the variety and nutrient quality of the food and beverages offered and sold to students through school a la carte programs," the researchers wrote. "This urgency is compounded by the likelihood that such programs will continue to be offered, given the increasing financial dependence of school food service on revenues generated by a la carte sales, as well as student preferences for convenient, tasty fast foods. That suggests how powerful the school influence is. Not only are they exposed to their own choices; they are exposed to the choices of their peers."

This is from the report: "The Association of the School Food Environment With Dietary Behaviors of Young Adolescents." by Martha Y. Kubik, PhD, RN, University of Minnesota. This report is one of an increasing body of evidence that school environment contributes to unhealthy dietary habits among schoolchildren.

For several years, the Board of Health has been in a continuing dialog with school personnel about a number of issues from cleanliness and adequate ventilation in classrooms to food service. Since the leaving of Chartwells, the food nutrition has improved substantially.

At one point, a large beverage company was providing $30,000 a year worth of perks and cash for the right to exclusive use of vending machines at school. Fortunately that is no longer the case, since the machines were filled mainly with sweetened water.

Given the marketing pressure favoring poor nutrition and too much food, it should be comforting for an administration to have Board of Health support in its choices to improve the diet in the school system. The board is attempting to create, with as little rancor as possible, a group who has the best and latest information on student nutrition and make it available to those needing it. For this reason we wish to include the school food personnel management as a part of a committee which will recognize all of the schools various concerns. We understand the financial pressures; the board i constantly seeking to further reduce its bud get and seek grants for its programs. But problem exists, and we would be negligen if we didn't provide of our knowledge an expertise in helping to solve it.

In a continuing study of school nutrition the US Department of Agriculture ha found that 90 percent of US schools offer 'a la carte' food programs which are no required to meet the government's nutri tional requirements. Current recommenda tions (they change frequently as more knowledge is obtained) call for eating a least five servings a day of fruits and veg etables a day and getting no more than 30 percent of calories from fat. Most a la carte items contain well over half fat and very lit tle vegetable selection. According to the USDA, the a la carte program sales gener ated only $913 per year per 1000 students in the 1998-1999 school year. We don't need to create a financial hardship to the school system to ensure that our kids learn healthy eating habits.

The Board of Health not interested in running the school food program. We are interested in providing latest nutrition guidance from authoritative sources and assuring that financial considerations don't override the requirement for our kids to learn healthy eating habits.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Searching for the elusive beach plum... and finding it

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

I began hearing the dire news sometime in late July. There would be no beach plums this year on Cape Cod. No beach plum jelly, every dollop of which would bring back summer. What, I wondered, could have prevented the spectacular spring flowering of the beach plum shrubs from not bearing plentiful fruit? Having been on the Cape frequently this spring and early summer, I had witnessed the flamboyant sprays of flowers that had turned sandy roadsides and dunes white like a winter's day after a fresh fallen snow. Now, after anticipating a bumper crop of beach plums, word was spreading that there would be no harvest. The spring rains, it seemed, had kept the pollinating bees away.

I began to contemplate the unthinkable, that to get through the long, dark days of winter I might have to buy a jar of commercially processed beach plum jelly, knowing all too well that such preserves are rarely (if ever) made from wild beach plums and are, instead, a hodgepodge of various cultivated plum products.

Wild beach plums have a long and charming history on Cape Cod. Native to northeastern coastal regions from North Carolina to Newfoundland, the beach plum — Prunus maritima — is a sun-loving stone fruit, related to plums, cherries and peaches. A member of the rose family, it thrives best where few other plants can, in the low nutrient, well-drained sandy soil of the dunes. The plumes of white May flowers give way in late summer to luscious reddish purple drupes about the size of grapes. Indeed, when the beach plums are plentiful, you'd be forgiven if you mistook them for bunches of Concord grapes.

Early explorers along the East Coast made mention in their travelogues of a blue plum that was most certainly the beach plum. On Cape Cod, Native Americans gathered beach plums for use in pemmican, a dried meat paste, and early settlers went a plumming, harvesting the fruit for preserves and wines. They later cultivated the shrub in cottage gardens. Depression era families took to gathering the fresh fruits to supplement their winter diet and by the 1940s a small but thriving beach plum cottage industry had taken root All over the Cape, enterprising housewives were processing jams and jellies in their kitchens for a public eager for the unique dune-kissed flavor. Then, nary a roadside stand could be found that wasn't stacked high with jars of homemade jelly. When a small, but enthusiastic, group of commercial jelly makers began shipping their product across the country, the Cape Cod Beach Plum Growers' Association was formed to ensure that consumers were getting the pure beach plum product that was advertised.

The post-war years saw interest in beach plums begin to wane. In the new booming industrial economy, fewer people were willing to do the tedious work of trekking into the dunes to harvest the fruit. Women, traditionally the jelly makers, were entering the work force and had less time to prepare jams and jellies in the old fashioned "scratch" way. Perhaps most detrimental to the future of the beach plum was the suburban and urban sprawl that eradicated acres of beach plum habit, What remained of the once-plentiful, wind-pruned crop became the private preserve of a few last intrepid traditionalists who, covetous of their secret garden, kept the whereabouts of their favorite shrub a secret and the flavor of the wild all to themselves.

The seal of approval from the Cape Cod Beach Plum Growers Assoc., ca. 1951.

Cape Cod artist Peter Hunt's whimsical drawing of a beach plum jelly stand.

Recently, with interest in beach plums, farmers' markets and home gardening again on the upswing, the Beach Plum Project, managed by Cornell University's Horticulture Department, is working to revive the small, but regionally historic industry. By cultivating beach plums as an alternative to other local fruits such as blueberries and cranberries, the Project hopes to satisfy the consumer demand for both native and heirloom plants as well as gourmet gift jellies and preserves. In various locations on Cape Cod, researchers and growers are studying beach plum habits, cultivating different varieties and developing new products - chutneys, wines, meat condiments and dried products.

Beach plums, however, have so far resisted being tamed. Whether learned through scientific study or folk tradition, anyone who has experience with beach plums knows that they are notoriously unreliable producers. A few pests plague the shrub, among them the plum gouger that bores a hole in the fruit. A fungus, called brown rot, begins as blossom blight in the spring and leads to fruit rot later in the summer. But those who watch the beach plum year to year are convinced that the plant's natural cycles — said to be three year cycles but still not well understood - have the biggest impact on fruit production. Even during dry springs when bees are plentiful, there is no guarantee that the fruit will set.

And so, by mid-July, hearing that this year would be one of those off years when the fruit did not set, I mentioned such to my brother whose encouraging reply immediately lifted my spirits. Not to worry, he said, if there is a beach plum on Cape Cod, JB will find it.

JB is one of my brother's regular fishing partners and, as Johnny likes to say, JB's sixth sense about all things natural is spooky. When no one else is getting a nibble, JB is reeling the fish in.

"He can smell the fish," says Johnny.

We've known JB since we were kids. Back then, he was doing pretty much what he still doing, fishing, hunting, gathering and enjoying life. My brother says he's one of the smartest guys he knows by which he means that JB has life figured out. He understands his world, is connected to his world, in harmony with it.

"He's never been in pursuit of more, never been one of those guys who emulates other people who are, themselves, lost. He gets along with everyone and you'll never find a single person who has a bad word for him. In a small town where everyone is backbiting, that says something about JB."

So, Johnny made a phone call and arranged for me to accompany JB on a beach plum expedition. I drove to Provincetown early one morning in a driving rain. As we hiked deep into the dunes, me with my opened umbrella, JB casually mentioned that with the wind coming from the southwest and the warmer part of the day coming on, the rain would soon stop and not start up again until later in the afternoon. Given that the forecast was for rain all day, I was curious to see if JB's prognostication would prove accurate. Within 10 minutes the rain stopped - and didn't start again until I was on my way home at 6 p.m. Spooky, indeed.

For three hours we walked, like a couple of modern-day Thoreaus, deep in the dunes, the Atlantic Ocean just over the crest, never seeing another soul, only fresh coyote and deer tracks, Fowler toads, earth stars and various kinds of mushrooms. We talked and picked beach plums - red, purple, deep blue, orange and yellow — from the thickets. I watched JB pick with the enthusiasm and respect of someone who is, truly, one with the land, someone who appreciates this gift, all the gifts, that nature has bestowed. By noon, I had filled a three-gallon bucket and JB had nearly filled his five gallon bucket. We left behind a crop of beach plums yet to come into their fullness. Over the next few weeks JB will return to the dunes — in between tuna fishing — to Pick again. He'll make several hundred jars of pure, wild beach plum jelly that visitors to Provincetown will carry home from the little market at Nelson's.

I'll think of him and his pioneering spirit, our parallel lives, as I wash my berries, boil and mash them, let the wine-dark syrup drip through the cheesecloth. The unremarkable flavor of the tart juice will belie the taste that results once a bit of sugar is added. Then, into the jars I'll pour this not quite red, not quite purple essence distilled from sand and salt. And on a cold winter's day, JB and I will both be but a dollop away from the sweetness of a summer's day in the dunes.

Bumbling spy or hero?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There is a life-sized statue of Capt. Nathan Hale, the first American spy, in front of CIA headquarters in McLean, Virginia, emblazoned with his last words that have so thrilled every red-blooded American boy —

"I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." I was devastated last week to learn that all of those things that were taught to us as gospel in grammar school were not quite true.

Far from being a master of espionage, Nathan Hale was a bumbling failure as a spy who bragged about his mission to complete strangers who couldn't wait to drop a dime to the Brits who in turn couldn't wait put a noose around the dashing young captain's neck.

As for his last words, Capt. Hale was apparently reading them from the script of a 1713 play by the English playwright Joseph Addison, whose character says in "Cato," Act IV, scene iv, "What pity is it that we can die but once to serve our country!" Who but a Yale man, as Hale was, would know that?

The new look at Hale's ability as a spy comes from a manuscript written at the time of the Revolution by one Consider Tiffany, a Connecticut merchant, and donated to the Library of Congress by one of his descendants.

According to Tiffany, who had Brit sympathies, Hale slipped across the sound to a spot behind the British lines on Long Island and made friends quickly with Robert Rogers, a British officer who claimed to be a spy.

(Rogers, incidentally, is the same Major Robert Rogers who was the hero of Kenneth Roberts' book about the French & Indian War, "Northwest Passage," which was made into a major motion picture starring Spencer Tracy. But I digress . . .)

"I'm a spy, too," said Hale, or words to that effect, as he accepted an invitation to dine with Rogers and his friends and wondered why that company of armed Redcoats were interrupting their meal before the dessert.

"How could anyone on a secret mission be so stupid . . . or so naïve or so credulous, to be taken in by a perfect stranger?" wrote James Hutson, chief of the Library of Congress' manuscript collection, in the Library's "Information Bulletin."

Should the information revealed in Tiffany's manuscript replace that which we learned in school? Wasn't it Napoleon Bonaparte, the ultimate realist, who once defined history as "lies agreed upon?" If Napoleon was right, wouldn't we only be replacing one lie with another?

Me? I prefer to remember the Capt. Nathan Hale we knew in grammar school and who is described in the CIA Website:

"This young man's selfless love of country and his ultimate sacrifice for his nation's cause remain a continuing reminder to all American intelligence officers of the duties and sacrifices of their job."

Take that, Consider Tiffany.

Non-native birds —not always welcome guests

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Non-native. Introduced. Exotic. Escaped. All these terms can be used to describe birds appearing in places where they are not found naturally. Usually birds get released with the help of humans, either on purpose or by accident. Not all introduced species succeed in establishing wild populations. A few have proliferated to the point of being not only a nuisance, but a threat to other species in particular, and to biodiversity in general.

In the late 19th century, a man named Eugene Schieffelin ran an organization called The American Acclimatization Society. He decided it would be a neat idea to bring all the birds in Skakespeare's works to the United States. Shakespeare knew starlings could mimic speech, a trait that has been recognized since the days of the Romans. In Henry IV, Part I, when Hotspur wants to upset Bollingbroke, he says,

"I'll have a starling shall be taught to speak
Nothing but 'Mortimer', and give it him
To keep his anger still in motion."

Thus, the starling was on the list to be brought to the United States.

Schieffelin released 60 birds in Central Park in New York City in 1890, then another 40 the next year. Starlings turned out to be adaptable and resistant to a fault. They do eat grubs and other troublesome insects, but they also compete with bluebirds, woodpeckers and Great Crested Flycatchers for nesting cavities. The aggressive starlings win out more often than not. It only took 60 years for the starlings to reach the Pacific Coast, and less than 100 years for their numbers in the United States to equal one-third of those found worldwide.

Starlings roost together in huge numbers, adding noise and dirty guano to their list of unpopular characteristics. The Fore River Bridge has been a favorite roosting spot where tens of thousands of these birds can be seen flying in at dusk each evening. Their remarkable flight maneuvers are perhaps best described by the famous ornithologist Frank M. Chapman:

"...the flock becomes a ball symmetrical as a globe in outline; suddenly with no suggestion of disorder, it lengthens to an ellipse which a moment later, narrowing in the middle and concentrating at the ends, simulates a dumbbell in form. Again a change, and a dusky snake undulates across the heavens only to telescope on itself and become a ball again."

Brooklyn Institute in New York imported House Sparrows, formerly known as English Sparrows, from England in 1850. Gradually these nuisance birds were released in at least a dozen states. The hope was that the sparrows would control certain noxious insects. They did eat certain types of caterpillars, but unfortunately they also displaced the native wrens, bluebirds, martins and swallows useful in controlling still other types of caterpillars. Until automobiles began to replace horses, House Sparrows ate undigested seeds from horse droppings. As modes of transportation changed, the sparrows spread to the countryside and became pests by ruining grain crops and stealing chicken feed. Within 50 years they had spread all across the United States.

Mute Swans are beautiful, elegant birds, known as "Royal Swans" in England where they are owned by the Crown. For aesthetic reasons the Europeans brought them to the United States in the 19th century to adorn ponds on large estates on Long Island, and to put in zoos and parks. Eventually some of these exotic swans escaped and established wild populations in scattered locations, especially on the East Coast. Swans are aggressive birds, and there is concern about their competition with other native waterfowl, both for habitat and food. In 1940, after being warned of a potential police raid on his operation, a man released the caged House Finches he was selling illegally. House Finches up until that time were only native to the West Coast. The released birds adapted quickly, and now the House Finch is found throughout the United States.

One of the more unusual stories of escapees becoming established in the wild comes from Hyde Park, Chicago. Monk Parakeets are native to South America, but were discovered in Chicago in 1973. Despite their tropical heritage, they seem able to withstand Chicago winters, and by 1979 had formed a successful breeding colony. Their large straggly nests are often near heat-generating transformers, at times causing disruptions to electrical service. Fears that the parakeets would spread have not been realized, even though the Chicago colony is slowly increasing. Some even wonder if the Monk Parakeet might fill the niche of the now extinct Carolina Parakeet.

Hunting interests are responsible for some bird introductions. 28 Ring-necked Pheasants were shipped from China to Oregon in 1881. Three years later, there were enough for 13,000 to be killed in one county alone. Introducing pheasants to the eastern part of the United States proved more difficult, partly because the first releases were birds that had been bred in captivity and did not easily survive in the wild. In the 1890s a game breeding program was begun in Massachusetts using some of the wild stock from Oregon.

Mallards were introduced for hunting in Hawaii and in Florida. They are now interbreeding with Hawaiian Ducks and the Florida Mottled Duck, both of which are endangered. Hybridization, of course, eventually leads to loss of biodiversity.

Occasionally birds find their way to new areas quite on their own. The Cattle Egret is an Old World egret that first found its way to South America in 1880. In 1940 it unexpectedly showed up in Florida and has been pushing its way north ever since. One appeared in Hingham last spring.

There have also been re-introduction programs for birds such as the Peregrine Falcon and the Wild Turkey. These programs attempt to re-establish native birds that have declined for environmental reasons or been extirpated.

Whether birds are introduced intentionally or accidentally, and whether for aesthetic reasons, to enhance hunting opportunities, or with hope of controlling pests, there is always the risk of unforeseen consequences. When this happens, like Pandora's Box, it is usually difficult or impossible to reverse the effects of what has already been done.

Romney less wary of union concerns than predecessors

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Battles between the Romney administration and the Legislature are gaining momentum. The Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund once stood at $2 billion but now is perilously close to zero and lawmakers are trying to draft adjustments to keep jobless benefits flowing without resorting to borrowing. In April, Gov. Mitt Romney proposed raising employer premiums and cutting the length of unemployment benefits from 30 to 26 weeks to replenish the balance. Without action, premiums will surge by $600 million in January.

Labor leaders are reacting testily to the idea of a benefit cut, and in old times, one would wonder why the governor wasn't doing more to put workers' concerns where the unions expect them to be: first.

But these are new times, and Massachusetts has changed, as Romney proved in 2002 by defeating a centrist, mainstream, establishment Democrat who had full union support. Having demonstrated the obsolescence of machine/urban/labor bloc politics, Romney no doubt feels less wary of, and constrained by, union concerns than did his predecessors, even his Republican ones. The administration also held steady on a course seemingly designed to ensure conflict with the Legislature over certain social services spending accounts that will run dry before the fiscal year ends next June. No one disagrees the accounts are worth fully funding — to preserve secure detention beds for youthful offenders, family services for the mentally retarded, and the like. But the administration is threatening to release the offenders and lay off social workers charged with safeguarding neglected kids.

And the components of conflict grew more complex in still another area — the one likely to occupy the most news space and air this fall. Gov. Romney proposed an economic development package heavy on tax credits and focused on new technology industries like biomedicine. He also proposed tax incentives to spur creation of affordable housing and a re-dedication to worker training programs. After Romney's surprise announcement, the political world began taking sides — but very tentatively. For now, the Romney approach is to tolerate foregoing future tax revenues to produce economic activity, which in theory would generate more revenue in the long run. The House-passed version uses current reserves to encourage the development of high-tech startups. The administration is proposing steering tax credits to more established firms — "I don't think it's a good idea for the state to take 10 start-up companies and try to figure out which is the winner," said Commerce and Labor Chief Robert Pozen.

Massachusetts has changed, as Romney proved in 2002 by defeating a centrist, mainstream, establishment Democrat who had full union support.

The Senate is expected to weigh in soon with its own version of a stimulus package. Senators collected ideas at a formal hearing on the House-passed jobs bill in Gardner Auditorium. Senators share the House side's dubiousness about the Romney proposal in the absence of actual legislation spelling out its details. At the same time, leaders in the Upper Chamber made clear they're not enthused about the House provision that would divert money from the state's tobacco-settlement fund to pay for job creation.

So with the fall hurricane season obviously in full force on the Eastern seaboard, the summer political doldrums are clearly over as well, with stormy times apparently ahead. Friday morning's news that the state's unemployment rate in August jumped from 5.4 to 5.8 percent will only add fuel to the jobs debate.

The pace of news was increasing everywhere.

• Abbott now head of conservation and recreation — The first task for the commissioner of state's new conservation and recreation agency will be to conserve money. Katherine Abbott, head of the Island Alliance, was named to be the newly formed agency's first CEO. Her initial tasks won't be easy: managing the consolidation of the Department of Environmental Management and the Metropolitan District Commission and improving recreational opportunities while spending $4.6 million less than the predecessor agencies did.

• Exports in bay state doing well, but unemployment is up — While exports nationally were up only 2.9 percent in the first seven months of 2003, they rose 13.6 in Massachusetts. John Gould, head of the Alliance for the Commonwealth, hailed the performance but called the recent collapse of World Trade Organization global trade agreement talks a "missed opportunity." That good news was tempered by word out of the Division of Employment and Training Friday that Massachusetts lost 8,200 jobs in August.

• Witnesses speak of painful – literally – Medicaid cuts — Reductions in Medicaid benefits are forcing thousands of poor people to go without dental work and eyeglasses. Some have begun skipping meals because it's too painful to eat, Boston City Councilor Michael Ross told the Health Care Committee. Rep. Kathleen Teahan (D-Whitman) believes it would cost $67 million to restore the services. The Romney administration opposes her bill, calling the benefit reductions regrettable but necessary and noting the services are optional under federal rules.

• Jenkins named new chair of ABCC — Eddie Jenkins, a former Democratic candidate for Suffolk County district attorney, was named to chair the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission. While Treasurer Timothy Cahill, who wields appointing authority at the ABCC, had criticized Jenkins' predecessor as a patronage hire, his office defended the appointment of the political veteran Jenkins, saying he and Cahill barely know each other. Jenkins intends to rehire some of the investigators fired by Mary Jo Griffin, his predecessor, in a long running contretemps over whether the investigators have enough training and competence to match their considerable statutory authority.

• Lottery ads returning; hill Holliday chosen — After a long moratorium on state funding for Lottery advertising, the first $5 million contract was awarded to Boston–based Hill Holiday. Former Senate President Thomas Birmingham staunchly opposed Lottery advertising on the grounds it encouraged poor people to spend more than they could afford on gambling, and his point of view held sway until this year.

• O'Brien rapped for political speech — Former gubernatorial candidate Shannon O'Brien drew criticism for a speech in which she inveighed against the policies of the Romney and Bush administrations. Normally such talk wouldn't generate any unusual notice, but O'Brien has recently become a journalist, having been hired as a consumer reporter by WB56. Romney's director of communications, Eric Fehrnstrom, wrote the station's GM, Vincent Manzi, to complain that reporters should keep their opinions to themselves in public. Manzi was noncommittal as to whether O'Brien would be instructed to stop speaking out on politics.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com
September 19, 2003

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on three roll calls from earlier July sessions. All of the roll call votes are on legislative action surrounding Gov. Romney's overrides of items in the $22.1 billion fiscal 2004 state budget. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

$500,000 FOR INMATES' LEGAL SERVICES (H 4004)

House 122-30, Senate 33-5, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $500,000 for the Massachusetts Correctional Legal Services Committee to provide civil legal assistance to indigent inmates in the state's prisons. Override supporters said it is important to provide legal services to poor people in jail. They noted that prisoners often have legitimate issues including prison conditions, prison safety, accommodations for blind and disabled prisoners and access to reasonable health care. Override opponents said this money often funds frivolous lawsuits and cited the case of a prisoner who sued the state because his cereal was cold. They said the state simply cannot afford this wasteful spending during a fiscal crisis. (A "Yea" vote is for the $500,000. A "Nay" vote is against the $500,000).

$530,000 FOR ENVIRONMENTAL AND COMMUNITY HEALTH HAZARDS (H 4004)

House 134-19, Senate 30-7, overrode Gov. Romney's $530,000 veto (from $2.7 million to $2.17 million) in funding for an environmental and community health hazards program. The veto also eliminates the earmarking of some of the funds for specific programs including $30,000 for a renal disease early intervention program, $100,000 for the prevention of lyme disease and $81,000 for maintenance of a statewide lupus database. Override supporters said the $500,000 is vital to fund this program that includes important environmental and health hazard initiatives including control of radiation and nuclear hazards, consumer products protection and lead-based paint inspections in day care facilities. Override opponents said that $2.17 million is sufficient to fund these programs in light of the fiscal crisis. They argued that the legislature should not micromanage this program by earmarking funds and said administrators who are experts in this field should determine how the money is spent. (A "Yea" vote is for the $530,000 and the earmarking of funds. A "Nay" vote is against the $530,000 and the earmarking of funds).

RAINY DAY FUND AND TAX CUTS (H 4004)

House 131-23, Senate 33-6, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of a budget section increasing the amount of surplus revenue that the state can keep in the Rainy Day Fund before it automatically goes into a Tax Reduction fund and eventually goes back to taxpayers. The budget section changes the formula and raises the cap. Override supporters said the increased cap is fiscally responsible and argued the fiscal crisis has proven that the state must keep additional money in reserve in order to prevent tax hikes and program cuts during difficult economic times. Override opponents said the legislature has raised the cap in the past and continues to attempt to do so in order to avoid having any surplus revenues go back to taxpayers. They said there should be a reasonable limit to what remains in the Rainy Day Fund before it is required to go back to the taxpayers. (A "Yea" vote is for raising the cap. A "Nay" vote is against raising the cap).

AMERICAN FLAG ETIQUETTE (S 329) - The Education Committee held a hearing on a bill requiring all public elementary and high schools to include a mandatory course on the correct use, display and etiquette relating to the American flag.

GYM CLASS (S 276) - A measure heard by the Education Committee would require public school students to take physical education classes in only two grades. Current law mandates physical education to be taught as a required subject in all grades.

JAIL FOR PARENTS OF ABSENT STUDENTS (H 870) - The Education Committee held a hearing on legislation allowing for the imposition of up to a $1000 fine and/or 30-day jail sentence on parents whose children have more than seven unexcused absences from school in a six-month period. Current law only allows for up to a $20 fine and does not provide for a jail sentence.

AFRICAN-AMERICAN HISTORY (H 1841) - A bill requiring all public elementary and secondary schools to include African-American history as part of their history curriculum was part of an Education Committee hearing.

JURY DUTY (H 1134) - The Judiciary Committee held a hearing on a bill exempting full-time college students and primary providers of health care services from jury duty. Historic homes could qualify for tax break owners throughout the country.

Here's how it works:

The program allows owners of eligible, historic properties to donate a facade conservation easement on the exterior of the property (visible from the street) to ensure that the architectural integrity of a historic property is maintained. The house must be either separately listed on the National Register or located in a historic district that is on the National Register.

With its 77,000 listings, the National Register, administered by the National Park Service, is the nation's official list of cultural resources worthy of preservation.

The facade easement is a legal agreement between the property owner and Trust (or similar non-profit organization qualified by the Internal Revenue Service) to protect the building's historic facade. By granting the easement, the owner agrees not to change the outside appearance of the structure without the Trust's permission.

The facade easement, which is considered a charitable donation under the tax code, is appraised between 10 percent and 15 percent of the property's fair market value. To participate through the NAT, the homeowner pays the Trust 10 percent of the value of the easement. So if the easement is valued at $100,000, the homeowner would pay the Trust $10,000, which is also tax deductible. The homeowner also pays the cost of the appraisal which usually ranges from $750 to $1,000, says Moonan.

Moonan says the easements which are granted in perpetuity do not affect the resale value of the home. The process of applying for a facade easement takes upwards of 90 days. The Massachusetts Historical Commission certifies the property's significance and the easement is recorded with the Registry of Deeds.

If there is a mortgage on the home, the bank is asked to subordinate its right to the facade, which is therefore protected in the case of a possible foreclosure.

He said the trust would respond within two weeks to requests for exterior changes to a property. The facade easement is for the exterior of the house that is visible from the street, so a homeowner that wants to add a deck to the back of the house would not have to apply for permission. The homeowner may also make repairs without applying to the NAT as long as they don't affect the way the building looks.

In Cohasset there are about 25 qualifying homes in the Cohasset Common National Register Historic District that was established in 1996 and includes North Main Street from Depot Court along the west side of the common to Sohier Street, and the properties on the north side of North Main from Sohier to Highland Avenue and then along Highland Avenue across Beach Street to Highland Court.

To qualify, a home must be a "contributing property" to the National Register District, in other words, if the home wasn't built when the district was established, it might not be able participate in the program. Commercial and residential properties can participate, Moonan said, but churches, most schools, and government buildings are not eligible because they are already non-profit. Two other Cohasset homes that are listed separately on the National Register could also quality: the Walter Gropius house on Atlantic Avenue and the Caleb Lothrup House on Summer Street.

Homeowners, who live in the Cohasset Common local historic district (established in 1978), must apply to the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission when making exterior changes. Moonan said the NAT will accept the same forms the CCHD uses. He made it clear, however, if the commission says a homeowner can't make a change – the trust cannot overrule that.

He explained that some people, who love living in an historic home but can't afford the upkeep, take the money from the tax deduction and put it back into the house.

The NAT says homeowners need to consider the balance between their income and the value of the easement. For example, a retired couple on a fixed income in a $4 million house might not benefit from the tax deduction because their income isn't high enough.

The tax deduction can be taken over six years but the IRS says the taxpayer must use up the deduction as fast as he can. Moonan said no one in the NAT program has been audited as a result of granting a facade easement. It is a program the IRS set up in conjunction with the federal government, he explained, adding the IRS wrote the guidelines and won't object to it as long as the guidelines are followed.

Alexander Macmillan, former chairman of the Hingham Historical Commission, said the program sounds interesting. He notes the facade easement can only be granted once and is in place forever. Hingham has two National Register districts with about 600 homes that could qualify.

"If it were me, I'd watch it for a few years and see how it works," he said.

Macmillan also questions whether homeowners could ask for a rebate on their real estate taxes from the Assessors Office.

"In theory if you give away 10 percent of the value of your house — you ought to be able to get a rebate on the value of the house," he said.

But Moonan says homeowners are not giving away any value. They are giving up a right to make significant changes, he explains.

"For those who already live in a local historic district – they are not giving up anything they haven't already given up," he said.

For more information visit the National Architectural Trust's website at www.natarchtrust.org or call Moonan at 1-781-275-2644.

Is the water system safe from terrorism?

The Water Commission has issued a Request for Proposals (RFP) from qualified consultants for the preparation of a Vulnerability Assessment and a Revision of the Water Departments' Emergency Response Plan.

The RFP documents will be available starting Sept. 17. The Water Commission plans to receive consultant proposals by Oct. 29 to start the project by Nov. 20 and to have the VA/ERP completed by April 5, 2004.

"The purpose of the Vulnerability Assessment," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission, "will be to comply with the requirements of the federal Bioterrorism Act to identify any existing weaknesses and to strengthen our security measures. Since the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, the Water Commission has been taking steps to improve the security of the water system, including improvements to physical security and changes in procedures."

The goal of the Vulnerability Assessment is to develop a system-specific list of priorities intended to reduce risks from threats of attack. The Emergency Response Plan outlines action steps to follow if a primary source of drinking water becomes contaminated or if the flow of water is disrupted. The revision of the Water Department's Emergency Response Plan will update the existing Plan that deals primarily with natural disasters by adding sections on how to respond to terrorist or other intentional acts identified by the Vulnerability Assessment, said McNabb.

The federal Bioterrorism Act requires water systems such as Cohasset's that serve more than 3,300 people, to prepare a Vulnerability Assessment no later than June 30, 2004 and to update the Emergency Response Plan (VA/ERP) by December 31, 2004. The Vulnerability Assessment will assist water utility personnel at the Cohasset Water Department in evaluating the water system susceptibility to potential threats and in identifying corrective actions that can reduce or mitigate the risk of serious consequences from adversarial actions such as vandalism, insider sabotage and terrorist attack.

The revision of Cohasset's existing ERP will be based on the results of the Vulnerability Assessment. Like the assessment, the revised Emergency Response Plan focuses on terrorist or other intentional acts, however it goes further to outline action steps to follow if the primary source of drinking water becomes contaminated or if the flow of water is disrupted.

Copies of the RFP will be available starting Sept. 17 from the Commissions consultant, Norfolk Ram Group, One Roberts Road, Plymouth, MA 02360, Attention: Mark Bartlett (508) 747-7900 x 131.

Students hope downtown shops will treasure trash recycling

CHS juniors start program in Village

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Downtown shops are making small changes to reduce the amount of trash they throw away on a daily basis. At the request of Cohasset Middle High School juniors Jim DeGiacomo and Kirby Bukowski, local merchants have been asked to take a recycling challenge, which will not only help the environment, but put a little money back into the shop owners' pockets, hopefully starting what will be an ongoing effort to keep recycling going strong in the Village.

Each year, students participating in the community service class at the middle-high school choose a local project to become involved with. Four times a week, students go out into the field to work for their cause, helping to find solutions to the problems in the community.

"The burden is on the students as a learning skill, to make contact and put their whole proposal together," said teacher Jack Buckley. He said because the idea is their own and they work independently throughout the entire project, it becomes a more meaningful experience.

Because Jim works at the Village Butcher Shop & Deli, the idea for their project almost presented itself. He said patrons are constantly approaching the counter to ask if the store recycles, so starting a recycling program was the perfect solution to an ongoing problem, not only where he works, but at various stores in the Village.

"In downtown Cohasset there's not a lot of recycling," said Jim.

In order to keep their project within reasonable limits, Jim and Kirby decided to take on three businesses downtown — the Village Butcher Shop & Deli, Cohasset News, and Tedeschi's.

Working with Selectman Merle Brown, who also sits on the Recycling Committee, recycling bins have been put in the stores and the owners have also been setting aside cardboard for the boys to pick up.

"We've received a lot of support from the businesses we've asked," Jim said.

Because the program is so new, the boys said the recycling bins were accidentally used as trash receptacles during the first few days, but when they were clearly labeled for recycling only, the two reported a dramatic increase in recycling. They said it seems when people have the option, they will generally opt to recycle. Jim said when he went into work last Saturday morning, the recycle bin was empty, and was completely full by the end of the day.

But it's not only the patrons who are becoming more aware of the need to recycle. Shop owners are recycling more as well. Cans from cooking are turning up in recycling bins and owners are collecting more and more cardboard from deliveries to be picked up by the boys. Kirby said the first week, they picked up 10 boxes from Tedeschi's and last Friday, that number had increased to 120 boxes.

"Cardboard is worth money," said Brown, adding the town gets paid $25 a ton to recycle cardboard because it is such a valuable material. Brown went on to explain, every time a store's dumpster gets emptied, the owner has to pay for it, so the less trash accumulated, the less money a shop owner is going to have to pay. Currently, he said the town pays $85 a ton to haul trash from the Recycling Transfer Facility to SEMASS, the incinerator in Rochester, Mass., and he expects store owners have to pay a little more than that to have a professional haul theirs away. For recyclables, the town only has to pay around $15 a ton, which is big savings that shop owners can take advantage of as well. Brown also said recycling cardboard is beneficial because it takes up a lot of room in the dumpster, and the need for trash pickup becomes more frequent Cohasset Hardware had already begun its own recycling program, even before the boys set out with theirs. Brown said he hopes Jim and Kirby's project will get other shop owners to do the same. But Brown acknowledges recycling is a different situation for establishments such as the hardware store that provides goods for patrons to take home and use, while the food shops invite patrons to sit and eat, then leave their trash behind. However, Brown believes even the smallest step toward recycling is positive.

"Anything we can do to help recycling is good," he said.

Brown said the key to success is to get the program to a point where shop owners can take over on their own after the semester is over. Jim and Kirby will provide studies for shop owners, showing how much money they save from recycling. They are also going to be asking patrons if they like the fact that local businesses are recycling, and are will provide that information to shop owners as well. Kirby said the two are in the process of setting up a web site that will provide the data they collect as well as contact information for those who wish to receive more information on recycling. For those interested in gaining more information on the program, Jim and Kirby's web site will be located at www.recycleco-hasset.cjb.net.

Welch wears many hats at the middle-high school

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Michael Welch is a history teacher, an economics teacher, chairman of the Social Studies Department and a Student Council adviser at the middle-high school.

Throughout the school day at the middle-high school, teacher Michael Welch can been seen wearing a number of different hats, so to speak. He's a history teacher, an economics teacher, chairman of the Social Studies Department and a Student Council adviser. But for all the roles he plays, there is one common element, and that is the joy he gets from working with his students.

Welch said he fell into teaching while in college at the University of Massachusetts in Boston. He had always intended on earning a degree in economics, and when he started finishing up his required classes in that subject, he began taking history classes as a way to fill his course load with additional topics he had some interest in.

"I always liked history," he said, and eventually, that interest turned into a double major.

While studying at UMass, Welch worked with children and did a lot of coaching for various sports, which he really enjoyed. To bring all of his skills together, Welch was sure a career in teaching would be a perfect fit, and decided to attend graduate school.

When he finished, Welch said there were very few local jobs available, but many open positions overseas. He began looking at programs teaching at schools out of the country, most of which wanted a year-long commitment.

"I thought, I could do anything for 10 months, and I ended up staying five years," he said.

Welch spent time teaching history at American schools in Columbia and El Salvador, before moving back to Massachusetts, where he taught history in Medway.

— TEACHERS WITH CLASS —

Welch currently lives in Rockland and has been teaching in Cohasset since the fall of 2000. He thoroughly enjoys teaching in Cohasset because it is a town he believes, "has a high respect for education."

"The parents are very supportive and the students come in prepared to learn," he said.

Welch said while he enjoys teaching his history courses, economics provides some opportunity history does not. Before taking one of his economics classes, students might turn on the television, and quickly change the channel if they see financial figures scroll along the bottom of the screen of their local news station. After taking one of his economics classes, Welch hopes students will not only know what the figures mean, but be interested in what they see.

"It's important for them to understand the world around them," he said, adding sometimes many well-educated adults don't know much about financial markets. "It's an important class that I really enjoy teaching."

When not preparing for class, Welch can be found helping students who are on the Student Council. He said one of the larger projects the students have underway is beginning a new recycling program at the school. He said other projects he oversees include organizing dances, running the student of the month ceremonies, and organizing spirit week activities.

When not on the job, Welch enjoys spending time with his wife Nancy, who is an elementary school teacher. The two met in college and were married just before they started teaching. The couple has two children, a 7-year-old son, Ian, and 3-year-old daughter, Lena.

This is the first in a series celebrating those who dedicate their lives to the education of children. If you have a suggestion for a story, please contact Samantha Brown at (781) 741-2935 or via e-mail at sambrown@cnc.com

Skippers late rally stuns Archbishop Williams, 23-19

A nine-yard touchdown run by senior DeWayne Morris with 18 seconds left to play capped a thrilling come-from-behind win for the host Skippers over Archbishop Williams, 23-19, in Friday night football action at Alumni Field.

The momentum in this one seemed to turn Cohasset's way on a huge blocked punt by senior captain linebacker Tony Truglia early in the third quarter, the Skippers trailing 13-0 at the time. Then, behind the outstanding blocking of the offensive line, the Skippers rode three rushing touchdowns by Morris (24 pts this year, Div 5 Boston Herald Weekend Hero) to the last minute victory and a 2-0 record.

The first half belonged to the Bishops as junior split end Bryan Baranow hauled in two touchdown passes from senior quarterback John White. Cohasset came out rusty, with a sputtering offense and costly penalties, and went in at the half down, 13-0.

Cohasset's defensive highlights of the first half included interceptions by junior DBs D J Silvia and Joe Durkin, a crushing special teams tackle by junior Joey Kehoe, and a QB sack by junior defensive end Kelvin Ferriera.

Whatever head coach Tony Rolfe and his assistants — Bob Silvia, Brian Pattison, Dave Terry, Tom Ventresca, Chris Bridges, and Donny Silvia— said at halftime to spark the Skippers worked. The opening drive of the third quarter resulted in a fourth down punt attempt by the Bishops, as the Skippers defense, led by linebacker Matt Casey (10 tackles), came out with renewed enthusiasm and shut them down.

Linebacker Tony Truglia (6 tackles) sprinted in from the right side and blocked the punt, then chased it down and recovered it at the two-yard line, providing the Skippers with a huge emotional lift.

Morris (24 points this year, and the Boston Herald's Div 5 Weekend Hero) proceeded to sprint around the left side, behind guard Nick Arment, tackle Dan Tarpey, and a sealing block from tight end Sean Connolly, to put some points on the board for Cohasset. QB Mike Dooley followed lead blocking from Truglia at tailback, senior captain right guard Steve Davis, and right tackle Dan McCarthy into the end zone for the two point conversion. The score stood at 13-8 Archies with 8:13 left in the third quarter.

The defensive backfield of the Skippers, Chris Bilodeau (5 tackles), D J Silvia (interception, 5 tackles), Durkin (interception, 3 tackles), and Connolly reined in the impressive first half aerial attack of the Archies on the next drive and forced another punt.

Cohasset took over on its own two yard line. However, after rushing for a first down, a fumble gave Archies the ball at the Skippers 12-yard line. White HARWICH- This game had all the markings of the type that keep coaches tossing and turning all night.

Twice in the first six minutes of Monday's game pitting Cohasset against Harwich, the visiting Skippers came within an inch or two of scoring—the first one a post ringer, the second a ball a Harwich defender booted off the goal line at the last possible instant.

Those chances represented the closest the Skippers would come to breaking through against a packed-in Harwich defense through the match's first 65 minutes of play, though they were hardly the only chances.

"Harwich just seemed to be playing for the tie," appraised first year Cohasset coach Rob Leary, whose team out-shot the host Roughriders 23-2 for the game. "They put all 11 players in the box after those first two near misses. We had a lot of chances to score, but we just kept missing or they just kept stopping us."

It was in the 66th minute that senior John Andrade broke his

Sink or swim time for golf team

Wins needed now to keep Skippers tourney hopes afloat

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

It's sink or swim for the Cohasset golfers. To make the state tournament they need to hit .500 with eight matches remaining. The record currently stands at three wins and five losses.

Coach Torin Sweeney has turned up the heat by focusing with his players on two strategies – "to manage the course better" and "to stay optimistic". Win or lose, the golfers bring to the game a good mix of skills, impressive experience, and a thirst to storm through the league.

Junior Colin MacGruder, for example, started eight years ago with the encouragement of his grandfather. Like MacGruder, junior Tim Pilczak also cited his own grandfather as a motivating figure. After 13 years at the game, Tim has developed an impressive long game and a polished short game.

The past two matches brought mixed results. In last Thursday's confrontation with Carver at the Cohasset Golf Club, the Skippers blended some fine shooting with an increased sense of confidence. They coasted to a 37-17 win thanks to Jack Carroll and Kevin Barber, who both scored 40. The team persevered in spite of the aerated soil conditions.

In Monday's match-up with one of the league's toughest teams, the Skippers fell short to Norwell, 31-23. Senior captain Mike Hajjar fired an impressive 37 followed by MacGruder with a 41.

"We stumbled on this one, but we are psyched about the remaining matches," exclaimed junior Tim Pilczak.

Colin MacGruder shifted his sights onto the impending showdown with Harwich.

Given the milder climate of the Cape, Harwich can find practice time nearly year round. The team also includes Massachusetts's #1 and #2 ranked players."

"The kids are managing the course better, such as taking into consideration wind conditions and so forth," noted coach Sweeney, reflecting on the season to date "We have certainly brought more balance to our games than in past years.

"We are in a highly competitive league with some very experienced golfers and strong teams. Regardless, I am very optimistic."

Turning it around

Lady booters leap into win column with 6-0 thrashing of Harwich

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

If the Cohasset girls soccer team returns to the state tournament this year, its members may be able to look at Monday's match against Harwich as the turnaround point.

After a tough 0-3-1 start, the Skippers notched their first win of the season, 6-0. Junior forward Casey Anderson led the attack with two goals. Lauren Rizzotti, Jenn Buckley, Molly Kirk and Sarah McMorris all scored as well.

For everyone but Buckley, it was their first score of the season. The senior midfielder tallied her third goal.

Cohasset was playing their first match in almost a week. Friday's contest at Carver was cancelled due to weather and poor field conditions. That game has been rescheduled for this Monday.

Head coach Deb Beal said one of the keys to the game would be to get off to a fast start. The trip to and from the Cape can be a tough one for the visiting team, and such was the case for Harwich on Monday.

"We did a better job of starting strong than in games past," Beal said following the game.

The team also improved their ball movement. The past few matches saw a lot of lobbing the ball down the field and trying to chase it down. But on Monday, the Skippers were able to do a better job of working to move the ball around and stringing together passes.

Although Harwich did play hard and win some touches, Beal said she was pleased with her team's ability to play some keep-away once they did get possession. She also said there was a lot more talking on the field.

Between last Tuesday's 2-0 loss to Abington and Monday, every girl on the team was given a chance to do a self- and team-evaluation. The Skippers had a frustrating beginning to the season and there were concerns about team chemistry, particularly after a 5-0 defeat to Norwell two weeks ago.

Beal said she has read all of them and has talked to the team about them, as well.

"It was a good way to get some things off their chest," she said. "Sometimes, the best way to express your feelings is on paper, rather than talking. This second scoreless tie in four days. Taking a well placed through pass from captain Chris Clark on a run in from the right of the goal, Andrade touched the ball a few times to settle it and then let fly with a shot from 15-yards out that beat the Harwich keeper farside.

Clark would add an insurance goal five minutes later, as the Roughriders came out of their deep-packed set in a desperate attempt to tie the game back up. The gifted Clark found the kind of room he'd been desperately seeking all afternoon as he controlled a bouncing ball in the top left of the box, and then unloaded a pea high corner past the powerless Harwich keeper.

That goal turned out to be the gamewinner, as Harwich would capitalize on a Cohasset defensive gaffe with three minutes to play to make it a 2-1 game.

Andrade's deadlock-breaker four days previous to this one was arguably even bigger. It came with five minutes to play in the Skippers showdown with Carver (now 3-2 in SSL play) for second place in the South Shore League. The Skippers (5-1 overall, 4-1 in SSL play) now trail only Norwell (5-1, 5-0) in the standings, thus setting the stage for tonight's second go-round between the Skippers and Clippers at Cohasset High (7:15 p.m. start) to quite possibly be for all the marbles in the SSL. The Clippers — who beat Cohasset, 3-2, on Sept.13 — have also bested Carver, 4-2.

Leary is working hard in practice to tighten up the areas Norwell exploited12 days ago.

"Basically, we lost that game on special teams," noted Leary. "Norwell scored twice off corner kicks. We can't allow guys to get open on corners this time around. Guys have to contain their marks."

Of course, the coach notes in the next breath that the team seems to have fallen into a pattern of repeating mistakes.

"We've been on a bit of a rollercoaster lately," said Leary, the former head boys coach at Rockland High. "We're doing a few little things wrong, but in some cases they're the same little things we've been doing wrong for a while. That's a little frustrating."

All in all, however, Leary said he is "extremely pleased" with the play of his team through the first six games of his tenure.

"We've had a lot of different players stepping up at different times, and our defense has, for the most part, been great," said Leary, who then went on to single out for praise the defensive core of Craig Laugelle, Conor Buick, Trevor Brady and J.T. Oronte.

Up front, the coach noted, balance has been the key. With his two points Monday, Clark moved into the tie for the team scoring lead with sophomore Aidan Buick, both now with 12 points. Not far off that pace, though, were seniors Dave Santiago, Andrew Wise and Andrade—all with over a half dozen points.

"The best thing about that is other teams can't key on just one or to guys," noted Leary. "It seems like it's been someone different leading the offense almost every time out."

Prior to the Norwell showdown, the Skippers were slated to take on Hull yesterday, and Leary certainly didn't want his team looking past this team that recently dropped a hard-fought 2-0 decision to Carver, especially considering the game is being played at The Gut, Hull's home hard-packed, tiny, windy field.

The Skippers were also scheduled to play Hanover this past Friday, but that game was postponed to Oct. 16.

On the right track

CHS field hockey team pulls to .500, eyes postseason return

By William Wassersug
CORRESPONDENT

With four games gone, things are on the right track for the Cohasset field hockey team.

Checking in at 2-2, coach Deb Bostwick is pleased with the way the team played.

Even the team's two losses gave Bostwick hope for bigger things as the season progresses.

One reason for that is the way the team played and carried itself in losses to East Bridgewater and Duxbury.

Add an impressive win over Scituate and a romp over first-year Sturgis and there's good reason for Bostwick's optimism.

"Last Thursday we played Duxbury," Bostwick said. "We lost 3-1 but I was very pleased with the girls. Last year we lost to them 4-0 and didn't get it over the 25 for a shot on net. This year it was only 2-0 at halftime. In the second half Katie James scored with an assist from Jessie Guild in less than three minutes. That cut the lead to 2-1. It was incredible play. No one gave up. We were outstanding playing them."

Bostwick said she wasn't the only person who noticed.

"After the game, the referee said we were the first team he's seen this year that gave Duxbury a run for their money," Bostwick said. "They're a great team. Duxbury is a Division 1 team in the Patriot League and they always go to the postseason."

Defensively, Bostwick credited her senior goaltender Caitlin Condon for an outstanding effort.

"Caitlin made some hard saves," she said. "Duxbury took 18 shots and she saved 15. She did a remarkable job."

One reason Duxbury fared so well was their game strategy.

"They have a wonderful tactic of putting the ball at your feet to get a corner," she said, adding that Duxbury notched 11 penalty corners to Cohasset's six. "To fight off the corners and do well pleased me. I felt bad for my poor offense. Every time they had a corner they had to run back to the 50 and sprint back down."

Cohasset also had six shots on net in the game.

"We had six shots on net," Bostwick said. "That says something about our offense. I'm proud of them."

Bostwick said there's a reason a small team like hers will play a Division 1 team like Duxbury when more than a fair share of teams have decided not to play them.

"Playing Division 1 teams is only going to make us better," she said. "When we get to the postseason, when we have that experience we won't be shell-shocked. We're going to see those types of teams in the postseason."

Against East Bridgewater, Cohasset played well, but just missed getting out with a tie.

"We played a very good game," Bostwick said. "I can't say enough about it. Our stats outnumbered theirs. They had one goal that Caitlin said she was screened on and she couldn't see."

At the half, Cohasset trailed 2-0, then lost senior captain Danielle Pinkus after she was hit in the mouth with a high ball.

Fortunately, she wasn't hurt badly and is already back in the lineup.

"Danielle had played very well," Bostwick said. "Then she was hit in the mouth and was out for the game. We had just cut it to 2-1, but when she got hurt it took the wind out of our sails."

Bostwick credited her team for keeping the game in reach.

"Jessie Guild and senior Frannie Noble picked up the slack in the middle and our senior captain Kelly Hurley controlled the left side of the field. I can't say enough about her."

In the late part of the game, Cohasset had a chance to make it interesting.

"With about 50 seconds, we got a penalty stroke," Bostwick said. "Jessie Guild took it. She had a foot foul and it was over. It was a very good game, very intense. We came from behind and never gave up. If we had a few more minutes we could have tied it."

Courtney Caron scored with an assist from Katie James and Kristin Howard added another goal with an assist from Guild.

The most impressive game so far was a 2-0 win over Scituate.

"Last year, the Scituate game cost us the tournament," Bostwick said. "We were up 3-0 and they came back and beat us 4-3. This year we had something to show them. We wanted them to know we're back in business."

Condon notched seven saves in the victory for her second shutout of the season.

Caron potted a goal on a breakaway, taking advantage of a perfect pass from Howard.

"It was 0-0 at the half," Bostwick said. "We came out a little slow. We were playing hesitant, careful. Scituate was pumped up and ready to go. I think they were there a half hour before the game. We woke up in the second half."

Guild added a goal in the second half with an assist from Caron.

"That was a great play," Bostwick said of Guild's goal. "It was a nice give-and-go across the net."

Bostwick said senior halfback Corey Evans, senior fullback Tess Foley and junior center fullback/center halfback Allison Dean also played very well in the win.

In the season opener, Cohasset notched an 8-0 win over Sturgis, a charter school on Cape Cod playing its first year as a varsity program.

"That was an easy win," Bostwick said. "It was nice to have."

Caron led the attack with three goals and an assist before she was lifted late in the game after scoring two straight goals.

Senior sweeper Rachel Doyle moved to the forward position when Caron left and proceeded to score her first goal of the season.

Pinkus added two goals and an assist, while sophomores Katie James and Mia Lieb-Lappen each scored as well.

"We had an array of people play very well," Bostwick said. "The girls came into that game very excited about their first home game. They wanted to show their skill and style to the home crowd."

Condon had six saves in the shutout.

Heading into the current week, Bostwick gave the team a little extra rest.

"A lot of us were sick after the Duxbury game," she said. "I gave everybody Friday, Saturday and Sunday off to get healthy."

With the solid start, Bostwick's goal is to have her players continue to perform well and improve where they can.

"I'm hoping the kids stay positive and they can keep the nice morale they have together," she said. "There's a nice camaraderie here. We just need to keep plugging away and keep the fire in their eyes."

COASTAL STARS REPORT

With summerlike weather and the Patriots home opener against the Jets, it was tough to think about taking to the ice. As many did, the Coastal Stars Squirt B2 team kicked off their season against Plymouth this past weekend. Having only a few weeks of practice, there seemed to be so many things, which still hadn't been covered in order to be ready for the first game. But, the players on Squirt B2 came to play.

It took a couple of shifts for the players on both sides to get settled into their positions for game. The first period against Plymouth went scoreless. It looked like the second period may as well, before the Stars put one on the board. The first goal of the game came with just under three minutes to play in the second. Persistently crashing the net, John Ryan managed to get the puck past the Plymouth net minder, with an assist from Trevor Salmon. The period ended 1-0.

The defensive pairings of Trevor Langley, Kevin Thomas and E.J. Culhane, Brennan Quackenbush, kept most of the pucks away from goalkeeper Pat Healey. But when tested a couple of times, Healey came up big.

Down only 1-0 to start the third period, Plymouth kept the pressuring the Stars in their own end in hopes of tying the score. Center, Chris Carpenter along with wingers, Tim Martin and Pat Burchill never stopped digging for that puck. With four minutes remaining in the game, Stephen Harrington made a move on the Plymouth defense to lift one past the goalie and make the score 2-0. With just over a minute to play, Sean McKenna stole the puck and connected with Jake Durkin streaking down the left wing. With a Plymouth player at his heals, Durkin skated in for the to beat the goalie and give the Coastal Stars Squirt B2 their home opener win! With the final score Stars 3 and Plymouth 0, congratulations to all the players for a strong first game. Go get 'em Stars!

definitely cleared the air on some things."

The Skippers had played a pretty good game against Abington. Although they did not score, the team had plenty of quality opportunities, but Green Wave keeper Casey Gillis made several fine stops in the final 15 minutes to preserve her shutout.

Buckley and Anderson led the offense for Cohasset, and both had at least one shot go off the post.

"If this game went five minutes longer, Casey was going to score," Beal said after the Abington game.

After the Harwich game, Beal complimented the play of Kirk and defenders Mary Silvia and Alicia Sanchez, whom the coach said played outstanding despite feeling a little under the weather. Both were instrumental in junior keeper CeCelia Chapman recording her first shutout of the year.

"It was nice to see some other kids playing well," Beal said. "When that happens, our confidence builds, and they play better together."

The confidence building will have to continue. Starting yesterday, Cohasset embarked on a stretch of five matches in nine days. Cohasset played Hull yesterday, and today will get an awaited rematch with Norwell.

"We have to go into the Norwell game with an attitude of 'we have nothing to lose'" Beal said. "We have to play well, just for our own pride's sake."

On Monday, there is the makeup game with Carver, and then matches on Tuesday and Thursday with Mashpee and Holbrook, respectively.

With the exception of the makeup game, all contests are at home. Beal says her team has somewhat of a homefield advantage, because Cohasset's field is longer and wider than most others, and other teams have to make an adjustment when playing there.

Beginners are welcome to attend all courses. Master Huang will present Chi Kung from the Ba Gua system on Sat. morning, Oct 4, 10 - 12:30. Skippers late rally stuns Archbishop Williams again hit Baranow for a 10- yard TD pass to extend the visitor's lead to 19-8 with 1:31 left in the third quarter.

The Skippers were not to be denied on the next series, as the O-Line comes through again. It was time for Tarpey, Arment, Casey, Davis, and McCarthy (sounds like a law firm) to take over the line of scrimmage. With the Cohasset faithful now on their feet (for the duration of the game), the Skippers started at their own 24-yard line.

Morris gained 27 yards on the ground behind the lead blocking of junior fullback Brendan Michaud, Archies chipped in 30 yards with two personal fouls, and junior wideout D J Silvia and senior wideout Chris Bilodeau hauled in passes from Dooley for another 14 yards of offense. Then, once again, the left side of the offensive line, Tarpey and Arment, escorted Morris in for a one yard touchdown run. Dooley hit Silvia with the two point conversion pass and, with 8:20 left in the game, Williams lead was cut to 19-16.

The next series for Archies was short lived, as senior ends Steve Davis, Rob Carpenter, junior end Kelvin Ferriera (2 tackles, QB sack), along with junior tackles Matt Baroudi (4 tackles), and Leo Clougherty were relentless in their pursuit of the Archies quarterback. Archies punter John White kicked from the 50-yard line through the end zone and the Skippers took over at their own 20-yard line with just under four minutes to play in the game.

The "Drive" of 2003 (to date) started with Morris rushing twice for five yards. The Third-and-five call saw senior captain QB Mike Dooley run around the right side behind blocks from Davis, McCarthy and Morris for 12 yards and a first down at the 37 yard line. On third-and-five again, Bilodeau (7 catches for the year) hauled in a 10 yard pass for a first down at the Bishops' 48 yard line.

Behind strong blocking from the O-Line — Tarpey, Arment, Casey, Davis, and McCarthy — Morris scampered down to the 28-yard line on a 20 yard rush for another first down with less than two minutes to play.

Dooley then hit Bilodeau for eight yards and tight end Crandon Leahy for nine yards to put the ball on the 11-yard line and another first down with 29 seconds to play.

On second down from the 9-yard line, with Archies's expecting a pass play, coach Rolfe switched it up. The Skippers offensive line cleared out the middle of the field, highlighted by a fine second effort block from left end Dan Tarpey, and Morris ran into the end zone untouched to the delight of the hometown crowd. Connolly added the extra point and Cohasset had a 23-19 lead with :18 seconds to play.

After the ensuing kickoff, Archies connected on a 20-yard pass to the Skippers 40-yard line. However, the Cohasset comeback was complete, as Archies two pass attempts from the 40 fell incomplete and time ran out.

The Skippers second half consisted of four offensive series, three touchdowns and 158 yards of offensive.

The huge Friday night crowd mobbed the team as it came off the field, accompanied by the exuberant cheerleading squad and the tunes of the best Pep Band on the South Shore.

Pencil in Saturday, October 4th, 1:30 for a road trip just over the Abington/Brockton town line to Cardinal Spellman High School as the Skippers open up their road schedule versus the (1-1) Spellman squad.

Peace and prayer service St. Stephen's

An evening Vespers Service, a half-hour of peace and prayer will be held every Sunday at 5 p.m. at Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave. The worship is open to all. There is no communion, no collection, no sermon. Instead, there is soft music and quiet prayer ranging from T.S. Eliot to Taizé to John Wesley. It is a half-hour respite between the busy weekend and the demanding schedule of the week ahead. God's voice that comes in silence keeps each one in the midst too much or too little.

Vesper is the evening star so it appropriately names the worship that takes place as the light fades and the rhythm of the day slows. The gathering dusk calls each to reflect on the gifts of the passing day. The prayer recalls: "Each thing we have received, from you it came, O God." A single candle stands on a small table in front. Its flame focuses thoughts and prayers as worshipers sit in silence, lost in care or thoughts of others, feeling grateful, embracing the peace. Vespers is mentioned in the medieval Book of Hours. In the Russian Orthodox Church, vespers is called "Prayers at Lamp Lighting Time."

All are welcome to close the day with peacefulness and prayer every Sunday at 5 p.m.

Local wine merchant to visit European vineyards

Amyra O'Connell is surrounded by wines in her shop in the village. O'Connell is going to learn more about wine during her upcoming tour of the vineyards in France and Spain.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Sipping wine in the vineyards of Alsace does not sound like a typical business trip. However, for Amyra O'Connell, owner of Village Wine & Spirits, touring the wine countries of France and Spain will not only be a welcome vacation, but a chance to learn more about unfamiliar brands of wine and their production, in the beautiful vineyards of Europe.

Along with husband Cliff Chase, O'Connell has been running Village Wine & Spirits for the past five years. After being contacted by Sopexa, a company that provides all expenses paid trips to vineyards for retailers of wine, O'Connell decided to apply for the trip to learn more about the regions, the wines, and their production. When she returns from her trip, their store will run a promotion of the new products, featuring wines O'Connell specifically chose for her customers. Wine retailers from Washington, D.C. to Boston will be taking part in the trip.

From Friday, Oct. 10, to Sunday, Oct. 19, O'Connell will be touring the French regions of Alsace and Côtes du Rhône, and will then proceed to the Spanish region of Jerez.

"It's completely free, and in turn, we'll promote their wines," she said, which seems like a win-win situation for everyone involved. Every Friday night, her store holds a wine tasting, which she thinks is the perfect way to showcase the new wines she will bring back from her trip.

Hopefully, the new wines will please the palates of her customers. "People that shop here are pretty sophisticated, and want to learn more, and love wines" she said.

She thinks many of her customers will enjoy the wines she brings back from the Côtes du Rhône, adding that many of her customers drink the Rhône wine she carries now. "It's a gorgeous, hearty wine," she said. "It's wonderfully warm and robust."

"A lot of people aren't familiar with wines from Alsace," she said, and thinks this trip will enable her to find some different wines from that region, which will open the eyes of her customers.

O'Connell also wants to learn more about sherry on her trip, which she said has gotten a bad image over the years. "When people hear the word 'sherry' they think of old ladies, but sherries are a gorgeous wine," she said.

O'Connell said she is constantly reading and learning about different wines and is looking at the trip as an educational experience. "It's exciting for me, and it's exciting for me to be able to bring it back," she said.

Above all, O'Connell hopes to bring back unique wines that provide something a little out of the ordinary.

"We try to make it very much a wine store," she said, adding that part of the goal is to provide as much variety as possible. She currently has an extensive selection of Bordeaux wines which range from $11 to $100 a bottle, to provide the perfect wine for any customer.

"Everyone knows what they like, and you don't have to be a wine geek to know that," she said, adding that during wine tastings, everyone has a great time sharing their ideas while eating and drinking good wine. Because there is no right or wrong, everyone has a good time exchanging ideas.

"We do have our regulars," she said of the Friday night ritual, and sometimes, although it's rare, even she has never tasted some of the wines before, making it very interesting to bounce her first reaction off the others.

Bill Saltonstall sniffs a glass of wine during the weekly wine tasting at the shop O'Connell runs with her husband, Cliff Chase. O'Connell is soon heading off to Europe to learn more about wine.

While O'Connell looks forward to the trip, "I have to leave my family behind," she said.

"I'm leaving my husband to take care of five children," she said, who range in age from 20 to 4 years old, not to mention he'll be running the store as well.

If she had the chance, O'Connell said she would love the opportunity to go for a more extended visit, to really get a feel for the land.

"I'd like to spend two weeks harvesting," she said, but added that this trip will teach her so much in the short time she'll be away.

When she returns, O'Connell looks forward to sharing her experiences in Europe, as well as her new wines, with friends old and new who come to her store in search of new flavors. They'll talk about food and they'll talk about wine, and for O'Connell, "Really, there's nothing more important."

Legion clambake breaks all records

Nearly 500 people attended the American Legion Clambake on Sandy Beach on Saturday, Sept. 6 surpassing any prior year's attendance. This annual event sponsored by the George H. Mealy Post of the American Legion is in support of the Legion's Christina Burke Scholarships given annually to worthy local area high school graduating seniors seeking higher education. In 2002, the Cohasset Post and it's affiliates, the Sons of the American Legion and the Women's Auxiliary awarded $16,000 in scholarships.

In addition to the lobster, chicken and steamed clam dinner catered by Gulf River Clambakes, those attending were treated to the music of the Irish Volunteers and DJ Jay Fiori. A highlight of the event was drawing of the winning raffle ticket that earned the lucky winner, Rich Rice his choice of two Vespa motor scooters or $5,000. Rich, whose mother resides in Cohasset, took the money.

Clambake Chairman John Covell presents Rich Rice with a check for $5,000. Rich had the winning ticket in the Clambake's big raffle.

Cohasset resident, John Covell, who chaired the event said, "Every year we try to make the clambake better. Our first objective is to make certain everyone has a great time and wants to come back. The second is to make certain that we fund the scholarship fund so that we can continue to give back to the local communities."
